COMMONWEALTH OF PENN-SYLVANIA

vs.

HARRIS A. CLEWELL.

No. 145 October Term, 1911.
Appeal by defendant from the judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Northampton County.

HENDERSON, J.

The defendant was convicted on an indictment charging him with selling oleomargarine which was not "made and kept free from all coloration and ingredients causing it to look like yellow butter" in violation of the Act of May 29, 1901, P. L. 327. The question involved is thus stated: "Whether the Act of Assembly of 1901, May 29, P. L. 327, Section 1, prohibiting the sale, manufacture, etc., of oleomargarine 'which shall be in imitation of yellow butter produced from pure, unadulterated milk, or cream, of the same, with or without coloring matter,' means any shade or tint of yellow, and not what is commercially known as yellow butter. In other words, is yellow butter in the Act synonymous with any shade of butter yellow?" In the argument of the appellant's counsel the statement is made that the only issue is, whether the oleomargarine sold by the defendant contained coloring matter or ingredients causing it to look like yellow butter produced from pure, unadulterated milk, or cream of the same, with or without coloring matter. The position taken by the appellant is "that the yellow butter named in the Act has reference to a certain standard of yellow butter which is the natural butter made in the month of June and which assumes a rich yellow color, but that natural butter made at any other time of the year falls below this standard of color." It is also contended that butter made at other times in the year than the month of June is generally artificially colored to resemble butter made in the month of June and that, therefore, butter so colored becomes a standard of the yellow butter to which the Act of Assembly refers and that the defendant should have been permitted to offer in evidence a sample of artificially colored butter for the purpose of showing that the oleomargarine which he sold was not of that color. The issue thus presented is within narrow compass. The position of the defendant asks us to declare that when the Legislature speaks of "yellow butter" it means butter having the color of that product made in the month of June, but we are unable to find either in the words of the statute or from a consideration of the reasons leading to its enactment any warrant for such construction. As has been repeatedly stated the principal object of the Act was to prevent deception by dealers in oleomargarine and it would be a remarkable inference that care was only exercised toward the safeguarding of the public against imposition as to butter made during one-twelfth of the year. Witnesses are not necessary to show that butter is not all of the same color whether made in the month of June or at any other time. Different shades of yellow appear in its production contingent on the breed of cows, the feed used, the time of year in which it is made and the process of manufacture, and when the phrase "yellow butter" is used we think the Legislature intended to describe the general color inhering in that product. Any other construction would open every market to the sale of oleomargarine made in imitation of butter and no prohibition would exist except as to the imitation of the highest natural color of butter or of butter colored in imitation of it. This would defeat the very purpose of the Act. It is our duty to give it a reasonable construction and to enforce it according to its spirit as well as its letter. If we should hold that the words "yellow butter" are equivalent to "commercial butter" as contended for by the appellant we would be deciding that the law forbids the sale of oleomargarine not made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like butter having the highest natural color of yellow or butter artificially colored in imitation of such highest natural color. This would be equivalent to re-enacting the statute and giving it an application and limitation which could not have been in legislative contemplation. The whole history of the legislation on this subject shows that what was aimed at is the prevention of fraud on the consumers by the sale to them of another substance as and for butter. It was recognized that oleomargarine when not artificially colored has a white or very light shade and that some butter because of the use of excessive heat in the making or some other cause might also be white or very light and that to make white butter a standard would be a practical prohibition of the manufacture of oleomargarine at all. Hence, the qualifying word "yellow." But there was no attempt to fix an absolute shade of yellow nor intention to permit an imitation of all shades of butter except that which was colored to the highest degree of yellow which butter in its natural condition ever possesses. It was unimportant, therefore, to know what was recognized in the trade in New York or elsewhere.

as "yellow butter." It may be as stated by the learned counsel for the appellant that this is butter colored to imitate June butter and that the public taste at the large centers of trade demands this color, but a large part of the butter produced in the Commonwealth is consumed in the localities in which it is produced and is sold from farms and creameries to local customers. These consumers were within the view of the Legislature as well as dwellers in the largest cities and are entitled to the same protection. The yellow butter to which the Act refers is not that sold in New York or Philadelphia alone but that which is produced on the farms and in the factories as well and is sold in its natural color or with the addition of coloring matter to increase its yellowness. The offer of artificially colored butter to establish a standard of color would not have helped the defendant for the prohibition is against the imitation of yellow butter whether it be colored or not. If the Commonwealth could show that the oleomargarine sold was in imitation of yellow butter produced from pure unadulterated milk and cream without coloring matter the case would be made out and it was of no consequence that it was not like some sample of colored butter which the defendant proposed to bring into the case. As there was evidence clear and direct that the oleomargarine in question contained cottonseed oil and butter fat and in the opinion of the expert chemist palm oil also, and that it possessed a distinct yellow butter color the case was necessarily one for the jury. The subject of the ninth assignment is a portion of the charge and contains instruction to the jury that the samples of oleomargarine and butter were to be sent out for the purpose of applying the testimony of the witnesses to the exhibits in the case and the court said to the jury that they ought not to substitute their own judgment irrespective of what the witnesses said or their own comparisons of the samples for the sworn testimony which they had in the case. This part of the charge immediately followed a reference by the court to exhibits numbers one, nine and ten and the testimony of a chemist called by the defense who analyzed exhibits nine and ten and testified that they were pure butter containing no coloring matter. The instruction to the jury was not inappropriate therefore, as they were not experts competent to determine the composition of the exhibits nor to say whether they were oleomargarine or butter unaided by the testimony of the witnesses. The instruction was not harmful to the defendant.

The offer to introduce a sample of what was alleged to be yellow butter for the purpose of establishing a standard of comparison without offering to show that the proposed standard was in fact butter was clearly inadmissible and properly rejected by the court.

The offer to introduce a sample of artificially colored oleomargarine was irrelevant. There are doubtless various shades of color in oleomargarine. The jury would get no information from the sample offered which would be of benefit to them in determining whether the article sold by the defendant was like yellow butter. The court permitted the defendant to offer butter produced from pure unadulterated milk and cream, and exhibit number nine, which was shown to be uncolored June butter was put in evidence. Testimony was also admitted to show that the defendant's oleomargarine resembled white butter and the issue was squarely made as to its likeness to yellow butter. Unless therefore the defendant can maintain his position that he may sell oleomargarine of all shades of butter color except the deepest shade of yellow exhibited in June butter he has no defense and this in our view of the statute is not a maintainable position.

The assignments of error are all over-ruled, the judgment is affirmed and the record remitted to the court below to the end that the sentence be carried into execution.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF

vs.

ALEXANDER T. IGNATAVIC.

No. 136. October Term, 1911.
Appeal by defendant from the judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Schuylkill County.

Filed March 1, 1912.

HENDERSON, J.

The charge against the defendant was that he sold oleomargarine which was not made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like yellow butter, in violation of the Act of May 29, 1901, P. L. 327. The fact of the sale was not denied, but the defendant contends that evidence was improperly introduced and that the statute was not correctly interpreted by the trial judge in the charge to the jury. The Commonwealth offered as exhibits packages of oleomargarine alleged to have the color of yellow butter bought from the defendant and a package shown to have the natural color of oleomargarine. All of these samples were analyzed by a chemist in the service of the Pure Food Division of the Department of Agriculture, and were admitted as exhibits in the case to show the color of the product sold by the defendant and the color of oleomargarine as it might be and was made without coloration or ingredients causing it to look like yellow butter. A sample of butter was offered to show the color of butter made from the cream of cows without the addition of any substance to affect its color. Objection was made to the introduction of the package of white oleomargarine because the question was not then raised whether oleomargarine could be made without some likeness in color to butter and to the sample of butter offered because it was made in the spring when the color of butter is light and the sample was not, therefore, a correct exhibit of the butter referred to in the Act of Assembly which the defendant contended was "June Butter" or "Commercial Butter." The first eight assignments of error relate to these samples and may be considered together. The sale of the oleomargarine being admitted the question for the consideration of the jury was whether the thing sold looked like yellow butter and while it was not necessary for the Commonwealth at that stage of the proceedings to show that oleomargarine was manufactured which did not have this likeness it was not erroneous to permit proof of that fact when offered by the Commonwealth in anticipation of testimony tending to show that a yellow color was an essential quality of oleomargarine. At a later stage of the trial the defendant offered evidence to show that a yellow tint was inseparable from that product when manufactured from the constituents essential to its production, and the relevancy of evidence as to this sample was thus established. We do not wish to be understood as deciding that a successful defense could be maintained on proof that oleomargarine is necessarily yellow, but that was one of the facts alleged and evidence was offered by the defense to that effect and this the Commonwealth might rebut. The sample was also admissible for the purpose of comparison by the jury between it and the packages bought from the defendant, one of which was shown to contain some butter and the other cottonseed oil, the presence of which would account, in part, at least, for the color exhibited by the specimens. The offer of the package of butter was allowed to bring before the jury evidence of the natural color of butter and this evidence we regard as clearly admissible, if evidence were at all necessary to inform a jury of average intelligence what yellow butter looks like. The offer of the defendant to prove that a sample of butter obtained from Gimbel Brothers in Philadelphia was yellow butter was properly rejected. There was no offer to prove nor pretence that it was the natural product of cream and the jury would receive no light from the examination of such an exhibit. The yellow butter to which the Act applies is butter made from the milk of cows and the imitation prohibited is likeness to that product. It was not sufficient to show that the article was regarded by the witness as yellow butter and whether made from milk and whether artificially colored or not was not offered to be shown. One of the principal objects of the statute as was stated by President Judge Rice in Com. v. Mellet, 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 50, was "to prevent the sale of oleomargarine which, by reason of the addition of coloring matter, or of the selection or treatment or combination of its component parts, is made to resemble and be in imitation of yellow butter." It was not the purpose to fix as a standard butter highly colored artificially nor something which may not have been in fact pure butter. The 14th, 15th, 16th and 17th assignments relate to evidence bearing on the meaning of the words "yellow butter" and the effort of the defendant to show what was known in the market as "yellow butter." The only market referred to was the Philadelphia market and the proposal was to show what the color "yellow" is as applied to commercial butter. These offers were over-ruled by the court for the reason that the Act has reference to the color of butter that is made exclusively from milk or cream without the addition of any ingredient to give it any other color than its natural color—the color derived from the ingredients used to make what is known as unadulterated butter. Opportunity was given to prove the color of butter made at the time of trial or at any other time of year but the defense was limited to the natural color, not that produced by the addition of some ingredient for the purpose of producing color. In so ruling the court was obviously in harmony with the spirit and purpose of the statute. It is within the power of the Legislature to wholly prohibit the sale of oleomargarine as was done by the Act of 1885, and if to prohibit, certainly to regulate. It may be that the regulation referred to embarrassed manufacturers of and dealers in this class of goods, but that is a legislative consideration. It was evidently the belief of the law-making body that this provision and others incorporated into the statute were necessary to prevent deception and it is not for the court to hold that this was a mistaken conception. Evidence was in the case that natural butter has a color known as "butter yellow" and that it is yellow all the year around; that depth of color varies somewhat but that in the ordinary processes of manufacture it has a distinctive yellow color, and this is what the defendant's oleomargarine imitated. The court submitted the case with instructions as favorable to the defendant as the facts would permit. Attention was called to the evidence that butter in May, June and July has a distinct yellow color known as yellow butter and that this is the color that the Legislature intended that oleomargarine should not possess—that is, the color of yellow butter. This we think limited the Commonwealth to proof to a higher degree of color than is required by the statute and to that extent was favorable to the defendant. We have considered the words "yellow butter" as used in the statute in Com. v. Clewell, decided at this term, and what was there said need not be now repeated. Our conclusion was that the prohibition of the statute applied to all butter made wholly from the milk of cows by the ordinary processes of manufacture having a yellow color although that color might vary in degree and whether the natural color or a color artificially produced in imitation of the natural color. The jurors saw the oleomargarine which the defendant sold; they saw a sample of white oleomargarine; they heard the testimony of one of the defendant's witnesses from whom he purchased the oleomargarine and they saw a sample of pure butter made about the time of the trial. They brought into exercise their own sense, as well, and on the evidence convicted the defendant.

We do not find any reversible error in the proceeding and therefore affirm the judgment and remit the record to the court below to the end that the sentence may be carried into effect.

COMMONWEALTH VS. IGNATAVIG.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, PHILADELPHIA COUNTY.

I, Alfred B. Allen, Deputy Prothonotary of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true copy of the Opinion in the above entitled cause, so full and entire as appears of Record in said Court.

ALFRED B. ALLEN,
Deputy Prothonotary.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust says the people of the Commonwealth have cause for congratulation in three decisions written by Judge Henderson, of the Superior Court, and just handed down as the unanimous opinion of that judicial body upon certain questions raised under the pure food laws of the State.

OLEOMARGARINE: The Oleomargarine Act of May 29, 1901, requires as one of the measures to prevent the deceptive sale of this butter substitute, that this product "shall be made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like yellow butter."

In the Clewell and Ignatavig cases, just decided, the oleo interests contended that the words "yellow butter" in the Act referred to "commercial yellow butter," or what the trade calls "yellow butter;" in other words, that the Act, in the use of these words, refers only to butter of the deeper yellow tint possessed by June butter. This position, states Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust, has been repeatedly taken by the oleo interests for some years past, and their contention has, again and again, sufficiently impressed the district courts and juries to nullify the efforts of the Food Bureau to enforce the law. The decision of the Superior Court denies the interpretation given by the oleo trade to the words "yellow butter," and is precisely in accord with the position taken by the Dairy and Food Commissioner. The court says in speaking of the Act: "There was no attempt to fix an absolute shade of yellow nor intention to permit an imitation of all shades of butter except that which was colored to the highest degree of yellow which butter in its natural condition ever possesses."

This decision should be known, the Commissioner declares, by every oleo dealer and every consumer. It means that oleo possessing a yellow color within the range natural to butter, is illegal. The Dairy and Food Commissioner will continue the vigorous enforcement of the law on this line.

PURE FOOD LAW: In connection with a confectionery case, Commonwealth vs. Pflaum, the defense represented by several of the best known constitutional lawyers of the State, attacked the constitutionality of the general Food Act of May 13, 1909, at most of the points concerning which such questions could be raised. The Superior Court affirmed the constitutionality of the Act at every point of attack. This decision is a great victory for the Attorney General's Department, which had charge of the case, says the Commissioner.

Of especial interest to the dealers, in the opinion of the Commissioner, are the decisions upholding the classing of confectionery as a food, declaring that the introduction into a food of a prohibited substance as a constituent of one of the ingredients of a food, is such an addition as the law prohibits, just as much as the addition of the prohibited substance by itself; affirming the power of the Legislature to tolerate preservatives such as benzoate of soda and sulphur dioxide in some foods, while prohibiting them in others, also, its power to distinguish between wholesale and retail dealers, as it has done in the guaranty provision of the Act.

In view of the fact that these questions affecting the application of the law to confectionery in particular, were pending before the court, the Dairy and Food Bureau has been delayed in the enforcement of the law to these products. Now that the Superior Court has interpreted the law at the disputed points, the Food Bureau will, as it is in duty bound, renew its vigorous prosecution of dealers who continue to sell confectionery containing sulphur dioxide, resinous glazes, and other adulterants.

PAPER READ BY JAMES FOUST BEFORE THE PENNSYLVANIA, NEW JERSEY AND DELAWARE WHOLESALE GROCERS' ASSOCIATION, HARRISBURG, PA., ON WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13, 1912.

Gentlemen of the Wholesale Grocers' Association:

It gives me great pleasure to accept the invitation you have extended that I address you upon this occasion.

This pleasure is due in part to the attitude which this invitation shows on your part toward the public works for the betterment of the foods offered to the public and for the protection as well of the honest manufacturer and dealer who has been subjected to unfair and unscrupulous competition.

I am glad, also, to have this opportunity of recognizing the valuable services of your important branch of the food distributing trade. Ten millions of people are affected by the way in which you, the wholesalers of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, serve them in helping them to secure that large fraction of their food supply that passes through your hands.

The magnitude of the public whose welfare your faithfulness or faithlessness in your service must unavoidably affect, is the measure alike of your opportunity and of your responsibility. Good citizenship lies far more in the proper conduct of a citizen's every day business than it does in the way he votes; because the common good is more influenced by it.

I speak of your responsibility. In some quarters, it is the habit to speak of the distributing trade as though it were a mere mechanical device connecting supply with demand; as though, in other words, it had no more influence and therefore no more moral responsibility than the chute through which grain drops from an elevator into a large freighter. This latter view does not bring to the eye the essential facts. Everybody knows that the wholesaler can, if not wholly, yet in very large measure determine the quality of the goods that he will handle and the honesty of the labels under which they shall be packed. By reason of their greater familiarity with the sources, methods of manufacture, and general nature of current grocers' supplies, their responsibility is greater than that of the retailer.

I am glad to believe that you appreciate, more and more, your responsibilities. Twelve years ago, the percentage of adulteration in staple groceries was very large. During the year 1911, we found only about two per cent. of adulteration in these goods.

It is true that the number of prosecutions during that year exceeded those of the past for like periods, but this was largely due to the violations discovered of a new and much needed milk Act, and not to adulterations found in staple groceries.

Various influences have had a share in working this improvement. In fairness to you, I take pleasure in saying that you have had no small part in bringing this betterment to pass.

As I have said in another connection, "I do not wish to be misunderstood as announcing the arrival of the 'food millenium.'" I do not mean to say that we have wholly stopped adulteration and misbranding. Our country still holds men who are willing to profit at the expense of the health of their neighbors and by deceiving them. Public sentiment and the execution of our food laws have driven them to their inner works, but they are strongly united and ever alert to repel any further invasion of the territory they have wrongfully occupied. The progress of thought among buyers, as well as sellers, is such that I indulge the hope that before long we may clearly realize that life is worth more than property and that our Acts and Laws may be in harmony with that principle. We all have from birth a feeling that our own lives are worth more than other people's property. It is harder to grasp firmly the truth that other people's health is more valuable than a few more dollars in our own pockets, but I believe we are getting a grip on this version of the Golden Rule."

"It is an old saying that 'Rome wasn't built in a day.' This saying applies truthfully to all great improvement in public practice. It is, however, too often used as an excuse for inaction and to cover the shirking of responsibility. We shouldn't expect to build our Rome in a day, but we should expect of ourselves that in our day we should do a good, strong, honest day's work upon it."

Let me refer briefly to the articles making up that remaining two per cent.; ketchup is still found containing benzoic acid in excess of the amount tolerated by the law, and made up from unfit raw materials; bleached flour is still sold in some stores; so-called "cider vinegar" still proves, in too many cases, to have some other source than the juice of the apple.

Carry your good work further and eliminate these things.

Last summer I gave notice that the retail stocks of breakfast foods would be carefully examined. Through the public spirit of the thousand newspapers of the State, this warning reached every part of the Commonwealth before any sampling of these stocks was begun. I am gratified to say that we found not more than half-a-dozen samples attacked by the weevil, though I am credibly informed that the warning to the retailers led to the dumping by them of thousands of packages of infested cereals, and thus we were relieved of the unpleasant alternative of legal proceedings to protect the public.

I have only a few suggestions to offer at this time:

Don't over-stock the retail grocer with goods liable to insect attack during the warmer seasons.

Don't lay in too great stocks of these goods yourselves, and thus avoid the temptation to unload them on the retailer as the dangerous season approaches.

Don't encourage the sale of ketchup made from cannery waste, even though it can be put up in large bottles that sell with a good margin of profit at ten cents.

Don't handle inferior flavors, which you wouldn't use in your own homes, even though they retail in two-ounce bottles at ten cents.

Don't handle bleached flour, because its sale in Pennsylvania is illegal.

Don't water the vinegar you sell, and don't try to sell vinegar that anybody else has watered. The customer can get water just as good and far cheaper at his own home, if he thinks the vinegar needs diluting.

Don't sell sugar syrups flavored with a little maple sugar, as "Maple and Cane" syrup.

I cannot fittingly close without expressing to you my appreciation of the strong position your organization has taken in favor of purity in foods and the suppression of frauds on the consumer. The officer of the law, however broad his authority, cannot go farther unless the people support him. Much of the progress we have made has been due to the vigorous support given by honest dealers and the public press.

BUTTERINE ALIAS OLEOMARGARINE.

From an article on "Butterine and Its Making," appearing in the Retailers' Journal, the following extracts are taken:

"Butterine is a product about which the public is not well informed. If the great mass of American consumers could find the time and opportunity to visit one of the plants where butterine or oleomargarine, which is the same thing, is manufactured by the car load each working day of the year, many eyes would be opened to facts which are closed by ignorance.

"This article is not an encomium on the merits of butterine as compared to butter—for no one with a modicum of horse sense, not even the men whose business it is to sell the artificial product, would attempt to place margarine on the same scale of desirability as butter from the standpoint of the palate.

"The most striking feature of large butterine plants—most of which are attached to and operated in conjunction with packing houses, is the irreproachable cleanliness of everything connected with the making of margarine. The visitor to Packingtown is not shown the process mixing which takes place in another part of the plant. As the door of the large room swings open for the guests their eyes meet a panorama of yellow gold, heaped into mounds on large trucks, over the entire floor. At the far end of the apartment men are working at large, square, shallow tanks, with spotless wooden snow shovels, digging into the soft, yellow gold and putting the butterine through the 'working' process. As one truck load is shoveled into a tank the empty one is wheeled away and another is detached from the long, yellow line and wheeled up to the 'working' machine. When the butterine has been finally worked to the desired consistency, it is shoveled out again into trucks and sent to the moulding room. Here the product is scooped out by the men and women assigned to this branch of the work and shaped with little wooden pallets similar to those in use on the farms. One thing particularly worthy of note is that from the time the butterine is first seen by the visitor in the trucks, down to the time of final weighing and moulding of the product, it is never once touched by human hands.

"As to the actual components of butterine there is nothing more injurious in its composition than pure butter and clean, wholesome animal fats. The two are, having been brought to the proper temperature, worked together scientifically, so that they blend together into a single substance. And there's your Butterine alias Margarine."

PARCELS POST AND THE RETAILER.

Richard H. Waldo, a prominent advertising man of New York city, in a contribution to the Grocery World and Merchant, has the following to say of the parcels post and its effect on business:

"Show the retail merchant that it is helpless to fight the parcels post on the one hand and on the other fail to give the customer what is wanted. Show him that carrying well advertised goods will go far to effect the mail order tendency. Show him that it is the public at large—the average customer of the average retailer—that has brought the demand for the parcels post to the present power. Continue the splendid work that many of you are doing in hammering personal service—quality service—at them. Drive home to them the many phases of such service. You know and I know that such service makes a great appeal to the American public, especially the American women. Do your readers know it as well as you and I do? Fully 90 per cent. of the average family's money will always be spent where satisfaction in service, rather than cutting in prices is made the magnet. How strong are you in getting that point grasped. Keeping the home money in the home town or neighborhood is not much of a trick. It is not at all difficult for the man or concern who gets back at the catalogue houses by personal service and by making the great national magazines the catalogue of his stock. I can quote men who have, in a comparatively few years, built businesses of a quarter of a million annually on this policy. As the rumor lies, I can show you a merchant in an Indiana town of about 3,000 souls, in the centre of a farming community, who has an annual business of close on to $200,000 built from nothing at all in seven years. How did he do it? By featuring advertised goods, especially those advertised in certain of the great consumer publications. He writes me that over 50 per cent. of his business is on those lines, and that he turns this part of his stock six times a year. A Kentucky merchant writes me that when he took over his father's business six years ago trade and the stock were equally dead. About all the money in the community went to the mail order houses. He made a straight personal appeal to the people of the community to give him the first chance and promised them the service in return. He has made good and sends me a list of nearly fifty well advertised articles on hand with orders in for others. Not large quantities—it is generally conceded that the best advertisers do not seek to stock a merchant too heavily—but enough to keep a little ahead of the demand and yet make a quick turnover. His business is not for sale."

KNOWLEDGE VS. MONEY.

The Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal, of a recent issue contained the following:

"By far the greatest requisite in the successful conduct of any business is knowledge. A business may be ever so well financed, if the manager lacks the up-to-date knowledge concerning his business he is bound to fail, and this becomes truer the greater the competition he has to deal with. The constant cry that one hears now-a-days that it is no wonder that so and so is making money because he has all kinds of money back of him, is utterly baseless and betrays ignorance. It is true that money has its advantages, but who could build up a successful business on money without possessing the necessary knowledge to run that business? On the other hand, think of the thousands of men who have achieved wealth who started in life with no other asset than a proper knowledge of the business in which they were to engage.

"In these days of strenuous competition, the man with the best equipped mind, and not the man with the best equipped pocketbook, is the one that wins out in the struggle. With all the natural advantages of the local creameries, there is scarcely a day but that the death of one or more is chronicled in the press. This is the result of adhering to old time methods—the culmination of ignorance, mismanagement. Time was when slipshod methods did not matter so much, but these days will never again be known in the creamery world. The brains and knowledge behind the big centralizing plants can be successfully met only by equal brains and knowledge behind the local plant. Fundamentally the real competition existing between the centralizers and the local creameries is knowledge and knowledge is power.

"For years we have insisted on the importance of some system of weeding out incompetency in the creamery and factory world. In almost all professions and industries affecting the welfare of the general public some form of examination is required to insure the successful performance of the duties by these professions and industries. But how about the butter and cheese making industries? Scores of butter and cheese makers are holding their positions almost solely because they are willing to work for less pay than those with a proper knowledge and training can afford to work."

GOVERNMENT WINS OLEOMARGARINE SUIT.

Government revenue officers have authority to break indoors with search warrants to enforce the law regulating the sale of and manufacture of oleomargarine, was the decision of the Supreme Court, Washington, D. C. The court held that revenue officers must use extreme measures in enforcing the "oleo" law, the same they are authorized to use in searching for "moonshine" liquor and other contraband. The decision was made in the appeal of the government from a decision of the federal court in Kentucky quashing an indictment against a Louisville firm which stopped officers from entering their creamery at the point of revolvers. The lower court held that the men had committed no offense, although the revenue officers had a search warrant looking for oleomargarine upon which taxes had not been paid.

WILL BAR DECOMPOSED CREAM.

"Decomposed and filthy" cream will receive the attention of the state pure food authorities the present year, in the state of North Dakota, according to the statement of Commissioner Ladd, Food Commissioner of that state.

"We often come across cream, especially during the summer months," says the commissioner, "which is being shipped in a condition unfit for use and which would be classed as decomposed and filthy both under the state and national laws. Such cream is gathered from shipping stations to be shipped out of the state, and parties so doing are making themselves liable to prosecution under the national food law and at the same time are making a shipment in direct violation of the food law of the State.

WEIGHT INSTEAD OF MEASURE.

Retail grocers of Chicago are now required by law to sell all vegetables and fruits by weight instead of measure as heretofore. Many retail grocers of Chicago have been selling by weight for some time but for the most part the old rule of selling by measure has prevailed.

City Sealer Zimmer expresses himself as confident that the new law will prove popular and practical. In speaking of the matter he said:

"I have about twenty inspectors out seeing that the new ordinance is enforced. Most of the dealers are already using the scales and it is only the peddlers who will have to change their methods to any extent as a result of the new law. It was from some of these that a protest came when the measure was being considered by council. But in the end it will prove satisfactory. The purchaser gets more for his money in every instance."

The table given herewith is a partial list of the fruits and vegetables with the number of pounds per bushel:

| | Pounds. |

FALSE ECONOMY.

Under the above heading Hoard's Dairyman contains the following article:

"Butter has ruled abnormally high the present winter. If there ever was a time when it would pay a handsome profit to feed good cows liberally it is now. High as the price of feed is the price of butter is high enough to make the proportion between cost and profit a large one. Take this calculation which is an old one and follow it out. A bushel of oats is worth in the Fort Atkinson market to-day fifty cents. Corn is worth sixty to sixty-five cents a bushel. Fed to a good cow there are three pounds of butter in a bushel of oats; three and a half pounds to a bushel of corn. Grind the corn and oats together and feed the mixture; there are seven pounds of butter in the eighty pounds of the two. We gain a half pound of butter by combining these feeds. The cost of this feed combined is $1.20, grinding and all. The value of the butter at the wholesale price of 37 cents a pound wholesale is $2.59—$2.59 in return for an expenditure of $1.20 worth of grains. And yet there are a great many farmers to-day refusing to feed their cows liberally under the mistaken notion that the feed is too high to pay a profit. The cost of other feed is no greater in proportion to the feeding value than are the oats and corn. We never saw a time when farmers were so reluctant to feed as now. If butter were selling at 20 cents a pound and bran and other feed at $18 to $20 a ton they would be buying and feeding liberally. Yet the profit would not be as great as at the present range of prices. If there is anything that farmers lose their courage and foresight on, it is in this matter of liberal feeding. Strange inconsistent notions are allowed to govern. For instance, we heard several farmers conversing the other day. They nearly all agreed that they could not buy gluten, and other high class feeds even at the high prices of butter. The trouble is there is a lack of close knowledge and good figuring as to the butter value of the various feeds. Men will buy cheap, trashy feeds because they are cheap, when in them they are paying double the amount for the protein that they would in the high priced feeds. Of the two the best is always the cheapest. Cow buyers tell us that the cows are showing the poorest condition than they have seen for years. The loss of hay last summer, the lack of silos, the fact that they have raised but little clover for the past two years and the high feed prices have set up the usual business shrewdness and forecast of a host of farmers. The high price of butter is not sufficient to pull them out of the hole. They refuse to pay fifty cents for a dollar bill when they ought to see and improve the chance. Their ideas of economy are wrong. True economy does not consist in with going without. This is simple saving. A wise spending of means is where the economy lies. Some farmers have so shrunk the milk yield of their cows by insufficient feeding that it is doubtful if they can be brought up to a profitable yield. It is mighty easy to go wrong on this feeding question in handling a herd of cows."

THE LOBSTER INDUSTRY.

The lobster fisheries of Canada which next to those of the codfish and salmon are the most important of the Dominion, have yielded from 1869 to 1906 inclusive, a grand value of $83,291,553. In 1897 the produce of this fishery was 23,721,000 pounds, valued at $3,485,265. Ten years later, in 1906, the yield had dropped to 10,132,000 pounds, but though less than half as great, it had nearly the same estimated value, namely, $3,422,947. Notwithstanding the increased cost to the consumer, the total value of the fishery has begun to fall, the product for 1906 being less by half a million dollars than that of 1905. The lobster grounds on the eastern coast of the United States were the finest the world has ever produced. In Canada alone 100,000,000 lobsters have been captured in a single year. If properly dealt with it would seem as if this natural preserve should have yielded lobsters in abundance and of good size for generations and even centuries to come. But instead lean and still leaner years soon followed those of plenty, first in the older and more accessible regions of the fishery until the decline, which has been watched for more than three decades, has extended to practically every part of this vast area.

Statistics of the State of Massachusetts afford pertinent illustrations of the older and newer phases of this history. Thus in Massachusetts in 1890, 373 fishermen working 19,354 traps caught 1,612,129 lobsters of legal size and 70,909 egg bearing females with an average catch per pot of 82. Fifteen years later it required 287 fishermen using 13,829 traps, to produce about one-quarter this number, or 426,471, and less than one-seventh the number of egg lobsters, or 9,865; while the catch per trap had diminished nearly two-thirds, and was only 31. No substantial increase followed until 1907, when the legal length was reduced to 9 inches, and this was undoubtedly due to the large number of small lobsters caught.

The total product of the lobster fisheries in the United States for 1892 was 23,724,525 pounds, but three-fifths of which was furnished by Maine, and valued at $1,062,392. It is significant to notice that thirteen years later, in 1905, the total yield had fallen to 11,898,136 pounds, with a value of $1,354,751. In other words, during this comparatively short interval, the supply was practically cut in two, but the value greatly enhanced.

THE UTILIZATION OF WASTE.

Among the wonderful advances of modern times is the savings of products that formerly were thrown away or discarded by producer or manufacturer, says the American Grocer. The former waste in refining petroleum, the sludge acid and coal tar has enriched many men and corporations, besides cheapening oil as an illuminating fluid. The bagasse of cotton fields used to be discarded, but since its utilization many great industries have been developed for the manufacture and use of cotton seed oil. For many years the valuable material constituting the by-products in the manufacture of coke was absolutely wasted; even to-day there is great extravagance in the manufacture of coke, through the continued use by the majority of the manufacturers of the old beehive type of coke oven rather than by the product oven. Hundreds of millions of dollars worth of these valuable by-products have been wasted by American coke producers, but it is gratifying to note that the improved by-product oven is replacing the wasteful beehive with considerable rapidity.

Continuing, the journal says: The above are but a few instances of the saving of former waste and giving it a commercial value. The Chicago stock yards furnish another instance of the great value to the consumers of the utilization of waste. Low priced meats would not be available if the former waste from the slaughter of cattle was still discarded. Like economy is practiced in the use of the by-product of milk, cannery waste, and so universal has this policy become that it is regarded as a sin to waste by-products.

There is another matter in this direction that comes home still closer to the grocer and that is the elimination of store waste. In a majority of stores boxes, barrels, cases and other receptacles are thrown upon the rubbish heap, given away or destroyed. And yet every container has some value, provided it is given proper care. Boxes are opened carelessly, covers are broken and no attempt is made to keep them in good condition to be replaced on the box and made of merchantable value. Heads of barrels are discarded or the barrel itself left exposed or burned or given away. If saved in good order they could be sold for a snug sum.

There is a waste in neglecting to care for goods exposed to the atmosphere, ravages of insects, promiscuous handling, evaporation, waste in careless weighing; waste in reckless handling or failure to wrap articles in the right way; waste in exposing crackers, fruit, and other articles to the ravages of pilferers. Waste in the use and care of scales, mills and other fixtures. Waste at the stable for want of a system for caring for horses, harness, wagons and regulating the use of feed. Waste through exposure of goods to the sun; through storing in damp places; failure to protect articles that absorb foreign flavors, such as salt, tea, tobacco.

It is very easy to let one dollar run to waste every day in a grocery doing a moderate trade and to have many dollars lost in stores doing a large business. And that $310 lost to the little store through waste means a big inroad on capital and in the case of large stores, a small dividend where a large one is anticipated. Steer clear of waste. It is an invidious and incessant evil.

THE CONSUMPTION OF CANNED GOODS.

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin the following editorial article on the growth of the canning industry is taken:

"The American Can Company in reporting increased gross and net earnings for the past year, reflects the increase in the canning industry, which, according to all reports, has reduced its stocks so that it will operate at full capacity next year. This increased consumption of canned goods which has developed from practically nothing—save the annual canning season of the housewife—within the memory of men in middle life, is one of a group of factors commonly overlooked in discussing the problem of the cost of living, now puzzling the nation.

"The canning industry has made luxuries of a generation ago a common-place and quasi necessity of the present time. Tomatoes, peas and the range of fruits and vegetables are available the year round, instead of in their limited natural season, and for tables, where under earlier conditions they would have been strangers the greater part of the year. To some extent canned products are a cheaper substitute for other edibles in the high priced market, and are to be classed properly among the necessities of life. But to a considerable, if not to the greater, extent the canned goods annually consumed in this country are an addition to the simple bill of fare which formerly supplied the domestic board, or are a labor-saving substitute which even at a somewhat increased cost, fits in better with modern ideas of living which tend to minimize the profession of housewifery. Giving canned food its due and according it a welcome as a servitor of the palate and as a pleasing variant of the bill of fare, and as a means of convenience, its advent probably has swollen the annual expenditure of the people for food.

In the growth of the canning industry also lies the explanation of the disparity between production and the consumption of fruits and vegetables and much of the food supply of the country, and the consequent advance in prices in the natural market. Every year the demand of the canners increases and substantially dominates the market prices. If we imagine the problem of living to be a mere of comparative figures, in which the expenditures of the average family of 1911 are compared with those of a similar family in 1886, or ten years earlier, we shall have to make a charge against the canning industry. But if we are to give satisfaction and comfort and convenience their proper due as an offset to cost, which is the true way of figuring this problem, we shall give credit to the genius which has given variety to every table from one year's end to the other by the canning process."

SOMETHING ABOUT OLEOMARGARINE.

Reasonable or unreasonable, remarks the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal, the fact remains that the public is laboring under the impression that the ten cent tax on colored oleo is a means of making oleo consumers pay an extra ten cents on each pound of oleo purchased by them. Of course, they are led to believe this through the extensive campaign of advertising and misrepresentation carried on by the oleomargarine manufacturers. People who can't afford to buy butter can buy uncolored oleo which is practically untaxed. This is a point which should be thoroughly impressed upon the public mind. Oleo in its natural state is lighter in color than butter, and, if sold in its natural state, is taxed only one-quarter cent per pound. If colored to resemble butter, then it is taxed ten cents per pound—why? Merely to protect consumers from getting oleo when they call for butter. Isn't that a fair proposition? Hasn't the consumer the right to know whether he gets butter or oleo? The making of colored oleo has nothing else for its object than the humbugging of the consumer. And in spite of the enormous sums of money which the oleo manufacturers and oleo dealers have had to pay as a penalty for such humbugging they still find it profitable to continue selling colored oleo as butter. The average consumer has no conception of the extent to which he is given colored oleo when he calls for butter. The greatest fight that has ever been waged in the interests of consumers is the insistence by the dairy industry that oleo shall be sold in its natural uncolored state so as to give consumer positive assurance whether they are getting oleo or butter.

POTATO EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.

The announcement that large quantities of potatoes are being imported into the United States lends interest to a statement prepared by Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, showing the imports and exports of potatoes during a term of years. While the production of potatoes in the United States is usually sufficient to meet the requirements of its population, there have been a number of occasions following short crops in the United States, on which considerable quantities were imported. On other occasions when there were shortages abroad and large crops in the United States, considerable quantities were exported. The total imports of potatoes into the United States in the last ten years aggregated 22,845,634 bushels, valued at $10,985,770, or about 48 cents a bushel, this valuation being based upon the wholesale market price in the countries from which they were imported, and does not, therefore, include the cost of transportation or duties paid, the rate of duty being 25 cents a bushel of 60 pounds, both under the present law and its immediate predecessor. The exports of potatoes from the United States during the same time amounted to 10,900,566 bushels, valued at $8,413,675, an average of 77 cents per bushel.

Potatoes imported into the United States come chiefly from Canada, Mexico and Bermuda in America, and Scotland, Ireland, Germany, and France in Europe, while in recent years small quantities have also been brought from China, Australia and the Canary Islands. The potatoes exported go chiefly to the West Indies, Central America and Canada, the largest quantities usually to Cuba, Canada and Panama, and the lesser quantities to other Central American states and the West Indian Islands. Small quantities have been sent in recent years to China, Hong Kong, British Guiana, the Philippine Islands, French Oceania, and certain of the South American countries, but practically none to Europe, which, although a large consumer of potatoes, is also a large producer.

The world's potato crop, so far as it can be estimated statistically, runs between five and six billion bushels per annum, but these figures do not include the production of China, North Africa, and most of South America, the original home of the potato, which was found under cultivation in South America by the Spanish discoverers and transported to Spain, and thence to other parts of Europe. Germany is by far the largest single producer of potatoes, her total crop for 1909, the latest available figures, being 1,716 million bushels, against 1,173 million bushels in European Russia, 613 million in France, 480 million in Austria, 184 million in Hungary, 137 million in Great Britain, 120 million in Ireland, 99 million in Canada and 370 million in the United States.

New York is the largest potato producing state in the United States, her product in 1910 being 44½ million bushels, against 35 million in Michigan, 28 million in Maine, 28 million in Pennsylvania, 25 million in Wisconsin, 15 million in Ohio, 12½ million in Illinois, 12¼ million in Iowa and about 10 million bushels each in Minnesota and New Jersey, while all the remaining states are represented with totals ranging from 1 million to 8 million bushels each.

The largest importation of potatoes during the past decade occurred in 1909, being 8½ million bushels; the largest exports of the decade occurred in 1911, being 2½ million bushels.

SHORT WEIGHT PACKAGES.

An interesting case was decided in Dunferline, Scotland, recently, relating to the methods adopted by various wholesale grocers throughout Great Britain, including the weight of paper in which half pound tea packages were wrapped as part of the weight of the tea sold. The defense was that from long established custom they were entitled to sell tea in this way, the bags in which the tea was contained being as light as was practicable to make them. The court held that while the charge against the defendants did not necessarily infer personal dishonesty, the tea was not weighed in the presence of the customer and the tea in the packages was slightly short of the required weight and he must find both the defendants guilty. One was a co-operative society and the other a shopkeeper. One of the defendants accepted judgment while the other appealed from the decision. If the court's decision is sustained it means that hereafter tea dealers must sell full weight tea exclusive of the weight of the package.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The cheesemakers of Sheboygan county, Wis., are experimenting with a four-ton truck over a route which heretofore had been covered by over fifty teams. Not only have the sellers of the truck agreed to go over the route, but have practically guaranteed to cover the route in two hours less time, thus saving considerable unnecessary work and indirectly aiding in cutting down the price of milk and cheese to the consumer.

Eight butter dealers were brought into the police court at St. Paul recently charged with selling less than a pound for a pound of butter. The prosecutions were brought by the city sealer of weights and measures.

The Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal remarks: There is no business in which ignorance proves so expensive as in butter and cheese making. It is easy for an incompetent butter maker to cause a loss to his creamery of $3,000 and $4,000 a year. Yet many an employer will employ an incompetent man to save $15 or $20 a month in salary.

The dairymen of the country are not united as to the best way of meeting the oleo situation. In the meantime the oleo industry is making rapid strides forward.

The Pacific Coast Condensing Company of Seattle and San Francisco, proposes to put $1,000,000 into Northern Wisconsin in building condensing plants. Other large concerns are also looking to Wisconsin. The American Casein Company and the American Dry Milk Company of New York have made propositions to the Eau Claire Creamery Company and to other big dealers in the state and would, if they could, take over the entire output of these plants for the manufacture of what is known as "dry milk," which is to replace condensed milk in the tropics, on shipboard and in the desert.

The report of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, shows that despite of the many actions brought against shippers of egg products which were unfit for food purposes by reason of filthiness, putridity or decomposition, traffic in such inferior articles of food did not seem to abate, as a resume of the inspection work shows that a far greater number of samples of such eggs were collected and more seizures made during this period than in the previous year. Vinegar is another substance which continued to be the subject of sophistication, and a great many instances of adulteration have been reported, the chief form of which is the admixture of inferior vinegar with cider vinegar, and the subsequent misbranding of the compounds as apple or cider vinegar.

According to the annual report of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, the collection of official samples of flour which had been bleached with nitrogen peroxide was continued for repeated investigations proved that a number of mills were continuing to ship inter-state consignments of such products in the face of adverse decisions by the courts. The data thus obtained was used in sustaining the department's position in the bleached flour appeal case which was argued in the spring of 1911.

The work of the dairy laboratory, National Department of Agriculture, has covered the entire range of dairy products, including other articles closely related thereto, such as malted milks, lactated infant foods, butter colors, ice cream thickeners or fillers, and other articles of minor importance. The total number of samples examined was 513, of which 320 were official interstate and import samples, the remaining 193 being of miscellaneous origin, and consisting chiefly of evaporated milks examined in the course of an investigation of the manufacture of that product. The greater part of the work under the food law during the year was upon evaporated, condensed and dried milks, malted milks, lactated infant foods, cheese and butter.

Certain oleomargarine manufacturers and others are advertising in magazines and elsewhere statements made by Dr. Harvey W. Wiley favorable to their product at congressional committee hearings. Dr. Wiley also said: "Oleomargarine is not as digestible as butter. It does not digest so well as butter because it contains more of the higher series of acids and practically none of the lower series which are more easily decomposed. * * * Butter is more easily digested than oleomargarine. It requires less effort. * * * The fraud in selling oleomargarine for butter is perhaps the most pronounced of any food fraud in this country and is deserving of the most rigid punishment. * * * The sale of oleomargarine as butter is a criminal offense."

It is said Pennsylvania was the first state to add ice cream making to its course of dairy study. Missouri added the feature in 1908 and has since given instruction in the subject. Vermont, Indiana, Iowa and other states have added this subject to the course of study in their dairy colleges and schools.

Hoard's Dairyman remarks: From a variety of sources do we learn that the tide of emigration is setting towards those old farms in Ohio and New York from the west. Many times more sensible this than going to Canada. Still further, if men want to wrestle with virgin soil Northern Wisconsin, the grandest clover, blue grass and potato soil in the world stands waiting their coming.

Dairy inspection as it is conducted in many cities is a farce according to Gus. Henderson, chief dairy inspector in Seattle. Continuing he says: "This may be a strong statement but upon investigation you will find it to be a fact. In many cities the office of milk inspector is simply the garbage dump and the work carried on by the inspectors amounts to nothing. In many cases he is looked upon as a common laborer having no special training." In the same connection Hoard's Dairyman says: "It requires the constant pressure of an enlightened public sentiment to keep this dairy business in the right track. Without it the farmer soon grows careless and indifferent to his own serious loss. At the consuming end this pressure is needed still more to see to it that the product is not corrupted and debauched by the stupid and, what we might call, criminal carelessness in handling.

It is claimed that Louisiana owns half the natural oyster reefs of the United States, which comprise 488,500 acres. She also has oyster bottoms not now in use and susceptible to cultivation by placing culch in the water of 500,000 acres more. Rhode Island has 16,500 acres of natural reefs and pays the state $130,000 annually. If the 488,500 acres of oyster lands brought as appropriate a revenue as Rhode Island, Louisiana would receive $3,988,000 a year. A political speaker recently said that the state could pay its entire debt in forty years when the bonds became due with the proceeds of the oyster revenues.

Advices from Vancouver, Wash., report that a grand total of 21,000,000 chinook salmon will be planted in the streams tributary to the Columbia river, by the hatcheries of the State of Washington. J. M. Crawford, Washington state superintendent of fish hatcheries, is authority for the statement. Owing to the fact that the state now rears fish of a sufficient size to elude the trout that would devour them when small, it is expected that a much larger proportion will reach the ocean.

According to the report of the assistant secretary of the Canadian Commission on Conservation of the oyster, the industry in Canada is fast dying out. The industry is falling away despite the fact that the demand is increasing every year. Prices during the past twenty years have risen fully 240 per cent. and it has been necessary to import large quantities from the United States. The total value of oysters imported in 1909-10 was $369,000 and the duty paid on them was nearly $44,000.

The action of the Federal pure food board in Washington forbidding the "floating" of oysters in brackish water for fattening purposes is of only incidental interest in New Haven, says the Register of that city. The city board of health passed a resolution two years ago forbidding the "floating" of oysters there, and since then floating has been abandoned by the oystermen in New Haven. In fact, the practice has been given up at other New England growing places.

A fund of more than a thousand dollars has been subscribed by the oystermen of the gulf coast of Mississippi to attack the Louisiana oyster law which prohibits the shipment out of Louisiana of oysters in the shell. The Mississippi packers and canners believe the law can be declared unconstitutional by the federal supreme court and it is said a test case will soon be made to bring it up to that court.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING MARCH.

During the month of March the total number of prosecutions ordered by Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust was 126, of which 93 were brought under the general food law of the State. Of these no less than 76 were of dealers who sold various articles of food containing undeclared sulphur dioxide. There were 33 prosecutions for the sale of dried peaches containing this substance, 20 for the sale of dried apricots similarly treated, 22 for the sale of dried raisins under the same conditions and one for the sale of dried prunes containing undeclared sulphur dioxide.

The law of the Commonwealth permits the use of sulphur dioxide in certain proportions in certain sorts of food, but it requires a public declaration of the same on the container or the package. A very considerable number of citizens are prejudiced against the use of such articles as benzoate of soda and sulphur dioxide. They will not purchase goods containing them unless ignorantly. It is for their benefit, as well as in accordance with the fundamental principle of the pure food laws that the State requires publicity upon the part of the manufacturer and the vender. It is a reasonable proposition and honest dealers and manufacturers should be glad to comply with it.

Among the other prosecutions ordered under the general food act was one for the sale of Maraschino cherries, misbranded. The sample is described as "an imitation, flavored with benzaldehyde." There was one prosecution for the sale of coffee that had been adulterated with coffee berries, one for olive oil that had been adulterated with cottonseed oil, and one for the sale of dates that were mouldy and unfit for sale. One dealer was prosecuted because he sold potatoes that were unfit for food, while two are in trouble for the sale of apples that were decomposed and unfit for food. Two samples of French peas contained compounds of copper, while three samples of candied violets were artificially colored with a coal tar dye. Four samples of noodles were found to have been artificially colored, while one sample of dried peaches was pronounced unfit for food.

One Tioga county dealer will be prosecuted for selling misbranded cheese. The sample was sold as full cream cheese, whereas it was nothing of the sort and was, therefore, misbranded. Four cases of violation of the non-alcoholic drink act were found in Schuylkill and Philadelphia counties. One of these was the sale of sweet cider containing sodium benzoate, one was for the sale of a misbranded "temperance brew," one was for the sale of Weiss beer as a temperance drink and the last for the sale of crescent beer, also a temperance drink.

Researches in Allegheny, Crawford and Westmoreland counties disclosed the fact that the cream and milk act had been transgressed in six instances. Four of the offenses consisted of the sale of cream low in fat; the other two were of milk below the standard in fats and solids; skimmed. There were six prosecutions ordered for violation of the cider act. Three of the samples were made from distilled vinegar and colored with caramel; two were not made wholly from apples, contained distilled vinegar and foreign material high in reducing sugars. One contained added water and had other defects which the law forbids.

Sixteen prosecutions were ordered for violations of the oleomargarine act. Of these eight consisted in the sale of oleomargarine as and for butter, while eight were for the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of yellow butter. It appears that the opportunities afforded by this illegal traffic are too favorable in the eyes of those who look for personal profit only and who have no regard for the consumer, to enable certain dealers to resist. Under the circumstances there doesn't seem to be any policy possible except the continued prosecution of offenders. There is no objection to the sale of this product on its own merits; the effort to deceive the buying public, however, is wrong and ought to be discouraged in the most practical way.

PROTECTION OF THE RETAIL DEALER.

In a previous number of the Bulletin attention was called to the protection afforded the retail dealer in food products under the general food law of the Commonwealth. All articles sold under the provisions of this act must be pure, but if the retailer who sells such goods has taken the precaution to procure a guaranty as provided for in the act, from the wholesaler jobber or manufacturer from whom he makes the original purchase, he is not held responsible for any sales of an adulterated article, but he must discontinue such sales the moment he is told the goods are not pure. This is a very gracious provision and makes the situation very much easier for the sincere retailer who may be victimized by a manufacturer or jobber from whom he makes some purchases and who, under other circumstances, might be punished for the offense of another.

But it must be borne in mind that the exemptions thus referred to apply only to articles of food sold under the sanctions of the general food act. We have several other acts dealing with the sale of food products that do not contain this guaranty clause. There is an act regulating the sale of sausage, one regulating the sale of milk and cream, there is an ice cream act and a vinegar act, to mention no more, that are not governed by any such provision. As ignorance of the law is held to be no justification of its violation, it would seem to be an act of prudence for retailers to provide themselves with copies of the various acts relating to food products and familiarize themselves with the general nature and the specific provisions of these laws. Carelessness in this respect has plunged many a well-meaning man into a sea of troubles.

The Dairy and Food Bureau has no desire to institute prosecutions. But the Dairy and Food Commissioner is charged with the duty of enforcing the several acts and of prosecuting violators. He has no discretion in the matter. For that reason he urges all men and women who are engaged in the useful and important business of selling food products to familiarize themselves with the requirements of the several acts, in a general way, at least. Those who do this will find the knowledge gained of much practical benefit. No reasonable person should censure the law or its agents for trouble which he makes for himself. The laws are within easy reach of every citizen. They have been printed in various forms and given a wide circulation. Explanations have been numerous. Insistence upon the study of meaning and requirements of these important acts has been a feature of the pages of this Bulletin, and it has reprinted them for general information as well as explained their requirements again and again.

Under the general law regulating the manufacture and sale of food products in this State the retailer is afforded ample protection. Should he fail to avail himself of that protection he has no right to censure the State or any of its representatives. The man who deliberately walks into the river is personally responsible for the subsequent happenings. The requirements and privileges of the food law are perfectly plain. A guaranty will protect the dealer who promptly ceases to sell when notified that the goods he is selling are adulterated or put up in violation of the requirements of the State law. He is only amenable personally if he defy the warning issued by the proper official and continue to sell adulterated or misbranded goods. Surely no sensible person can complain of such an act. It may not be too liberal, for it is generally conceded that the innocent grocer should not be punished for the sins of the manufacturer, but it is just and right.

The other acts have their own special provisions. These do not include a guarantee feature. It is important that dealers should remember the distinction and govern themselves accordingly. Knowledge of the law will usually be followed by obedience to law. And it is not the duty of the State to make allowance for wilful ignorance. Its rules and regulations are accessible to all and it expects its servants to see that they are enforced without fear or favor. There is no alternative for the officer who means to do his duty by the State and the dealer as well as the consumer.

THE PESTILENT FLY ONCE MORE.

In other years the Bulletin has borne testimony to the malevolent character and dangerous qualities of the pestilent fly. The season has once more arrived for the appearance of this noisome and troublesome insect. Although public sentiment has been aroused against it to some extent and its mischievous opportunities have been considerably curtailed in wideawake communities, yet it has not been exterminated and is still capable of doing great harm. Many minds have been aroused to the dangers of constant companionship with this active little creature, but others continue in the bonds of ignorance. They look upon the fly as a nuisance, but they make no effort to reduce its numbers or abate its activities. They have become accustomed to consider it one of the unpleasant accompaniments of hot weather and have not yet begun to dream of doing without its attentions in summer as well as in winter. They still have a great deal to learn about sanitation.

There would be no flies if it were possible to make an end of filth. The fly is born in filth. Its presence is a necessary condition to its appearance in the world. It is a scavenger and was so regarded by our forefathers for many years. But it is the sort of a scavenger that perpetuates evil conditions by its activity in distributing the germs of disease. It loves disease and death. Putrefaction is its ideal haunt. It seeks out the most loathsome spots in the community and carries the seeds of decay and death into the cottage of the poor and the palace of the rich. It haunts the chamber of sickness and death, feeding upon the poisons there having their origin and development and it carries these evil things into the presence of the healthy, transforming them into victims of the poisons it has carried into their presence. This is the history of many a summer season. It explains why so many persons are suddenly stricken down by mysterious disease and hurried off into the darkness and the silence of the grave.

Every intelligent housekeeper is now aware of the peril brought into the home upon the wings of the fly. Sanitarians have occupied many columns in the newspapers, many pages in the magazines in defining the nature of that peril and in urging the vital importance of excluding the fly from the house. Yet it is difficult to banish the pest effectually. In families blessed with many children, where the doors are constantly opening and shutting, the intrusive and persistent little beasts lie in wait and are pretty certain to find their way into the kitchen and the dining room, even if excluded from other parts of the dwelling. Yet these two rooms are the very places where the most harm is liable to be done. For food may be quickly but effectively poisoned by the germs carried on the body of the fly and this poison often finds its way into the human system. In this case eternal vigilance is the price of health, sometimes of life.

The householder should neglect no duty by way of thoroughly cleaning up the yard, the out-buildings, the cellar, every portion of the house, paying special attention to the pantry. The fewer breeding places for flies are left in the vicinity the sparser will be the crop of flies. If all spots of this sort could be utterly obliterated the flies would soon vanish, taking up their quarters in less careful or vigilant communities. Having done all that is possible to cleanse and purify the house and its surroundings proper screens should be procured for doors and windows and placed in position at the earliest possible moment. Then one of the mixtures or papers that deal out death to this foe of mankind should be procured and used for the benefit of any stray members of the tribe that manage to elude your vigilance. By proceeding in this manner and never relaxing one's carefulness it will be possible to wage a good fight on behalf of the physical welfare of the members of one's family. Carelessness in this respect after one has come into a knowledge of the truth becomes the sister of crime and might easily be the parent of lasting regret. For the free fly never passes a day without bathing himself in some infectious poison or without making himself too familiar with some member of the human family. He is not to blame; we are if we suffer him to have his way.

USES FOR ALL OF THE ORANGE.

From the blossoms that adorn the bride's coiffure to the last neglected seed in the cull everything in the orange henceforth will serve man, says the Baker's Weekly. Instead of allowing one-third of the great crops to rot upon the ground no element in this fruit will be lost.

Through investigations conducted in the University of Pittsburg practically 100 per cent. of the world's orange crop can be utilized in commerce. Fellowships established in the university under the direction of Dr. Robert Kennedy Duncan call for the expenditure of nearly $100,000 in industrial research and among these a sum of $2,000 a year for two years has been donated pending the investigation of the means of utilizing orange culls and other citrus fruits, including grape fruit and lemons. In addition to the subscription of $2,000 a year a large additional consideration is offered for the successful application of the experiments.

The advantage of the research will accrue not only to the fruit growers of Florida and California and other parts of the world, but to manufacturers of oils, flavoring extracts, confectionery, medicinal preparations, etc.

One of the results of the investigation likely will be the satisfactory preservation of pure orange juice in a manner not conflicting with state and federal pure food and drugs acts. A real orangeade has now been discovered.

A dozen oranges of average size will produce a quart of juice. Selling this at five cents a glass would equal the profit made on a dozen of good oranges, aside from the revenue to be derived from the extraction of the various oils, aldehydes and terpenes in the rinds and the seeds.

The orange cull, as all shippers and fruit dealers well know, is not fruit which has shown decay. The cull may be of inferior size or show a slight bruise, but in all other respects be just as good for commercial purposes as the A No. 1 quality. At present the difference between the No. 1 brand and the culls represents almost a total loss.

A bulletin for 1910 from the United States Agricultural Experiment Station in Porto Rico says that from 20 to 25 per cent. of all the orange crop of the island is lost annually from decay. Nicolas R. Snyder, American consul at Kingston, Jamaica, reported last year that fully a third of the citrus fruit crops there rots on the ground. These fruits, Mr. Snyder declares, are principally oranges and lemons.

The percentage of losses here estimated results from the neglect of the culls. When the crop is picked the rejected oranges mostly are in good condition for the fruit press and the rind would yield their rich ingredients. Thus far the oils in the seeds has been applied to no particular commercial use, but the rind is particularly valuable.

The oil of the orange skin consists of about 90 per cent. of a terpene known as a'limonene. From the essential oils perfumes, camphor, and other terpene derivatives are extracted. The flavoring matters of the orange are bodies known as the aldehydes, of which the one in the orange is called citral. The method that has been used for the preparation of orange extract is to utilize the entire extract of the skin. After thorough experiments it is more customary now to distil the majority of the terpene.

Comparatively little attention has been given in this country to the manufacture of what may be called the by-products of the citrus fruits. The report of the agricultural experiment stations and the American consuls recite the same sad story of loss and what has been shown by the Pittsburg chemists to be needless waste.

Articles in commerce made from this orange rind are made principally in the province of Calabria in Southern Italy. There in antiquated plants conducted by the peasants are manufactured the precious oils on which the United States imposes a duty of about $1 a pound. The price of the oil as a result of the duty is about $2.50 a pound. America pays this while more than $1,000,000 worth of the fruit is lost in Florida and California every year.

CHEESE AS A FOOD STAPLE.

The Department of Agriculture has made a prolonged investigation of the relative value of cheese as a foodstuff. Secretary Wilson has recently issued a bulletin on the nutritive value of cheese in which he says that "an ounce of cheese is equivalent to one egg, to a glass of milk or to two ounces of beef" The bulletin says that weight for weight cheese contains nearly twice as much proteids as ordinary beef. According to this bulletin a pound of cheese costing 22 cents has almost twice as much fuel value as a pound of good beef costing 25 cents.

At the experiment station conducted by the Department squads of cheese eaters were installed with the idea of determining what effect a cheese diet has upon the digestive tract of the average individual. The investigations covered a long period and during the time the experiments were in progress one man was kept on the cheese and bread diet, varied occasionally with fruit, for months, and experienced no ill effects, while others in the squad were allowed a change of diet occasionally. At the conclusion of the experiments it was found that cheese was as easily digestible as meat, that if properly prepared it does not cause physiological disturbances and that it may be used as a chief and cheap article of diet.

The bulletin says: "In the large number of experiments young men in good health were fed on a diet consisting of bread and fruit, combined with American factory cheese, which was made with different amounts of rennet in different stages of ripening. The result showed that over 90 per cent of the nitrogenous material of the cheese was digested; that is, retained in the body, and nearly 90 per cent. of the energy it supplied was available. In other words cheese compares favorably with other foods in thoroughness of digestion, that is in the percentage finally digested. Furthermore it did not cause any physiological disturbances."

The bulletin deplures the fact that cheese is not used more commonly as the main part of the meal instead of it being used as a flavoring for dishes "au gratin" than as a substitute for meat.

"The fact that it is not more commonly used in this country," says the bulletin, is probably due to several causes. One cause is habit, which makes the meal seem incomplete unless it includes meat, another is the fact that since cheese has a more pronounced flavor than meat, it is not so likely to be generally acceptable as the chief food of a meal. Another cause is the fact that it is commonly believed to be indigestible, and still another is the fact that housekeepers, through lack of experience are less skillful in the arrangement of bills of fare in which cheese is the entral food than they are in arranging bills of fare in which meat is used."

The bulletin advises housekeepers that when cheese is the chief article of food there should be plenty of crisp watery vegetables—water cress, celery, lettuce, simple fruit salads. In giving cheese the main place on the bill of fare the housewife is advised by the bulletin that it calls for the harder kinds of bread—crusty rolls or biscuit, pulled bread, rye bread, the harder brown breads or crackers.

The bulletin besides containing a great deal of other information on the value of cheese as a food tells the housekeepers how to make cottage cheese and kindred dishes, including curds and whey, sour cream cheese, uncooked curd, or French cottage cheese, junket, buttermilk cheese and Devonshire cream, or "scalded cream," the last mentioned being the most toothsome of all the dairy products. The bulletin describes the method of making it as follows:

"Allow a pan of whole milk to stand for twenty-four hours in a cool place or for twelve hours in a warmer place. Place the pan on the cooler part of the stove and heat until the milk is very hot but not to the boiling point. The more slowly the milk is heated the better. Having been heated the milk should be kept in a cool place for twenty-four hours and then skimmed.

More than 150,000 tons of cheese, valued at over $28,000,000, is produced in this country every year by the manufacturers of the product and in view of the great importance of this dairy product Secretary Wilson has produced another government cook book which gives instruction in the art of preparing cheese so varied and savory that they will not pall upon the appetite. The book contains seventy-nine recipes for dishes and sauces.

SUGAR SUPPLY AND CONSUMPTION.

According to the latest estimate of the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, 7,670 million pounds of sugar, or an average of 81.78 pounds per capita, against the former high record of 81.19 pounds per capita in the fiscal year of 1907, was consumed in the United States during the year 1911. The consumption of the product exceeded that of any other year in the history of the country. The figures are official so far as concerns the quality brought into the United States during the calendar year from Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and from foreign countries. To this the Bureau has added the latest estimates of the sugar produced in this country during 1911, and by subtracting the official figures of the exports from the grand total of imports and domestic production, obtains the total of 7,670 million pounds, or practically 82 pounds per capita, as the indicated consumption of the year 1911. Ten years ago, in the year 1901, the indicated consumption was 5½ billion pounds, or 72 pounds per capita; twenty years ago, in 1891, 3¾ billion pounds, or 61 pounds per capita; thirty years ago, in 1881, 2¼ billion pounds, or 43 pounds per capita; forty years ago, in 1871, 1½ billion pounds, or 36½ pounds per capita.

This very large consumption of sugar in the country in 1911 accompanied an unusually heavy production both in continental United States and its sugar producing islands, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippines. The quantity brought from the islands exceeded in each case that of any earlier year, and the estimated production of beet sugar in the country was the largest on record, though that of cane sugar was slightly below the average of recent years. While the quantities of sugar imported from foreign countries in 1911 fell somewhat below the figures of 1910, the aggregate production in continental United States, production in the non-contiguous territories, and imports from foreign countries exceeds that of any earlier year, while the quantity exported was smaller than in the immediately preceding year.

The import valuation of sugar brought from foreign countries in 1911 was, speaking in round terms, 90 million dollars; from non-contiguous territories, 78 million dollars; and the estimated value of that produced in continental United States, 90 million dollars. The Bureau of Statistics estimates the duty paid on the sugar imported from foreign countries in 1911 at 50 million dollars.

One striking fact which comes to the surface in this study of sugar consumption, remarks "The Trade," is found in a comparison of production of cane and of beet sugar respectively. While exact figures of domestic production in 1911 have not yet been completed, the latest and best available estimate puts the production of beet sugar at 1,105 million pounds and that of cane sugar at 700 million pounds, the production of beet sugar thus exceeding that of cane sugar by more than 50 per cent. Prior to 1907 the production of beet sugar was never as great as that of cane sugar. In 1901 the quantity of beet sugar produced was less than one-third that of cane.

The quantity of sugar brought from the insular possessions of the United States has also increased greatly during the decade, that from Hawaii being in 1901, 695 million pounds, against 1,136 million in the year just ended; and from Porto Rico 163 million pounds in 1901, against 654 million in 1911. From the Philippine Islands the increase has been especially rapid since the enactment of the present tariff law which permits the importation free of duty of limited quantities of Philippine sugar and as a result the quantity of Philippine sugar imported from the Philippines in 1911 was 402 million pounds against 218 million in 1910, 108 million in 1909, and 103 million in 1908.

Approximately one-fourth of the sugar consumed in the United States is of domestic production, another one-fourth is brought from the non-contiguous territories and the remainder from foreign countries, chiefly Cuba, from which the importation in 1911 amounted to 3,193 million pounds, out of a total of 3,732 million pounds from all foreign countries. The next largest foreign contribution to the sugar supply of the United States came from the Dutch East Indies, which sent 593 million pounds. The contributions from our own islands were as indicated, from Hawaii, 1,136 million pounds; Porto Rico, 654 million and the Philippines 402 million, and of sugar produced in continental United States 1,105 million pounds from beets and from cane 700 million pounds, the figures of the domestic production being estimates.

PROPOSED BILL FOR STANDARD CONTAINERS.

A bill for standardizing sizes of packages for apples, recently introduced at the suggestion of the apple distributors, provides for sizes a little in excess of those for the standard bushel or barrel provided for by the present United States law. This is due to the fact, says the Inland Grocer and Butcher, that while a bushel box, basket or barrel will contain a full bushel of grain or flour, the same container will not hold a full bushel of large fruit. The proposal to make the standard apple container a few inches larger than the standard bushel meets the difficulty raised some time ago when the city sealer of Cleveland found that bushel boxes having the capacity in cubic inches required by the law did not contain a full bushel in weight of large fruits or vegetables such as potatoes, turnips, etc.

Under the Sulzer bill in Congress a standard box or basket must contain a full bushel. A standard barrel must contain three bushels of apples. Boxes, baskets or barrels can not be marked as standard in size unless their capacity is sufficient to contain these full quantities.

The law does not require that all packages be branded but if they are branded the brands must tell the truth. It applies only to bushels and barrels of apples, not to smaller or larger quantities. It provides also for three grades of apples which the packer or shipper is permitted to stamp upon the container under penalty if he misrepresents the grade. The intention of this provision is to avoid constant complaint arising from the fact that apples found in the middle of a barrel are frequently much inferior to those found on the top and bottom.

It may be repeated that the proposed law applies only to apples. Doubtless, before it receives the approval of the congressional committee, it will be so amended as to include other fruits and vegetables. It is not unlikely that its very mild provisions will be enlarged so as to make it mandatory in the matter of branding instead of merely permissible as it now is.

SENDING FARM PRODUCE UNDER PARCELS POST.

American Consul Gunsalis describes in a letter recently received by the State Department the effect of the new parcels post law in South Africa. The agricultural parcels post bill is very comprehensive in its range and practically means the conveyance at low rates of anything produced or manufactured within the confines of the Union. Among the articles which may thus be sent are butter, eggs, poultry, bread, biscuit, yeast, tea, dried meats, jam, honey, tobacco, cigarettes, dried and bottled fruits, confectionery, plants, seed and so on. In Cape Town one of the great drawbacks to direct dealing with the farmer has been the cost and trouble of getting goods conveyed from him, but under the agricultural parcels post a parcel up to eleven pounds in weight will be carried to any part of the Union for twenty-four cents. In order to prevent fraud the authorities require that a declaration shall be signed by the senders. Returned empties may also be sent by this system. The original declaration label must be attached endorsed "returned empty," and the empty parcels must be addressed to the person who signed the declaration.

The scale of postage is as follows: Up to $1\frac{1}{4}$ pounds, 6 cents; over $1\frac{1}{4}$ pounds and not more than 3 pounds, 12 cents; up to 11 pounds 24 cents.

EXPORTS OF FRUITS AND NUTS.

During the last twelve years the exports of fruits and nuts from the United States have aggregated more than 200,000,000 dollars. The exports reached their high record in the calendar year just ended with a total of 29,000,000 dollars, or more than three times as much as a decade earlier. The foregoing sentence summarizes the result of a compilation prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, suggested by the large exports of fruits and nuts in January of the present year which aggregated $2,537,742, or 50 per cent. in excess of the exports of the same month of the preceding year, and giving promise that the high record exports of fruits and nuts of last year will be exceeded by those of 1912. Not only are the exports of fruits and nuts increasing, but their growth is far more rapid than that of imports under that head. In 1901 imports were more than twice as much as exports; last year they were 50 per cent. more than the exports of similar articles.

The principal exports of fruits and nuts in the calendar year 1911 consisted of apples, $9,000,000; prunes, $4,500,000; oranges, $3,000,000; canned fruits, $3,750,000; raisins and other dried grapes, $1,333,000; pears, $750,000; peaches, $500,000, and peanuts a little over a quarter of a million dollars.

THE MILK PITCHER OF SIX MILLIONS.

The following article is taken from Harper's Weekly, of a recent date:

To fill the milk pitcher and the cream jug every day for a world capital like New York is a task so prodigious that at first glance it seems almost impossible to keep up the supply with regularity. To do the work regularly and keep the supply up to the very highest standard of purity and excellence is a test of genius—especially that genius which consists in an infinite capacity for taking pains. It is the work of an army—not of an army with banners, but an army of dairy experts with the cleanest stables, the best feeding, the finest cows amid the most hygienic surroundings, the most wonderful scouring appliances and dust eliminators, remarkable machinery for cooling and preserving the purity of milk and for carrying it swiftly for hundreds of miles so as to distribute it with promptness among six million of thirsty and hungry mouths.

The era of

"Where are you going my pretty maid?"
"I'm going a milking, sir," she said—

is as extinct as the dodo or the great auk. Milking nowadays is done by a husky man instead of a pretty maid, unless, indeed, it is performed by ingenious machines very well contrived for the purpose. Instead of standing under a shady tree down the lane and answering to the name of bossy, the modern cow has a number and pedigree as well certified as that of royalty. She has a record kept with scrupulous accuracy—so many quarts of milk, so many pounds of butter per day, per week, month, year—during her whole lifetime, as well as the record of just what she has eaten in that time. So the modern dairyman can tell you, almost at a glance, just what such a cow has cost and what she has produced, prove to a penny just what she has added to the wealth of the world during her humble but exceedingly active career.

The sight of seeing one of his good cows standing under a tree down the lane at milking time would throw the modern dairyman into a fever. Dead leaves, chips, twigs, insects, etc., fall from the trees and corrupt the milk. The "harmless, necessary cow" of these enlightened times stands in her highly hygienic stall, which is floored with concrete and frequently scrubbed. The cow herself is curried and brushed every day. Her stall is in a cheerful, well lighted, and freely ventilated barn. Where is the haymow? Gone; gone with the milkmaid, the dodo and the auk into the obsolete past. Haymows are not hygienic; dust, weeds, clover seeds, etc., used to fall from them into the milk pail. So the dairyman has a tight, solid, impervious floor in his loft. Nothing can sift through it. The men who clean and feed and milk the cows are clean shaven, well kept, enthusiastic and frequent bathers, who go to their task newly manicured and wearing quite aseptic costumes white as snow.

One listens in vain around the barn for the old slogan "Git over thar, gol ding yer!" with the accompanying bump on the knee against old bossy's ribs. All that has gone out, too. Cruelty is costly. Kindness pays. Cows kindly entreated as well as hygienically kept and fed yield the most and the best milk. In these days of conservation the man who mistreats animals is picking his boss's pocket. Out he must go.

Do these facts seem strange. They certainly do to this writer, who had the good fortune to grow up in the country long ago. Old time residents of big cities write letters to editors admiring or complaining about the changes time has wrought since they were boys. They ought to see the changes time has wrought on the farm, especially on a dairy farm. Experts agree that New York city receives the best, purest and richest milk and cream supply in the world. The reason back of it is—perhaps enlightened self interest is the correct definition. In the last generation various outbreaks of fever were traced to a contaminated milk supply. There was great consternation. Laws were enacted giving power to the health department to destroy impure or impoverished milk wherever found and to punish the dealers in it. Inspectors were sent throughout the great grazing districts that supply New York's six million mouths with milk to make sure that the cows were healthy and well kept and the milk defended from contamination.

Long before this time the best city dealers in milk had taken care that their supply should be pure and rich and sweet, but the new laws—old laws now—made all other dealers comply with certain standards of excellence. Just as the best dealers kept ahead of their competitors before the era of state and municipal inspection, so they have still kept in the lead in the excellence of their product; but the whole city has benefited by the rule of cleanliness and care.

The territory affected is of huge size. Some of New York's daily supply comes from points as far as four hundred miles away—almost up to the Canadian border. The greater part of Father Knickerbocker's dairy farm, however, lies within a radius of two hundred miles of his doors. From this farm he drew last January 1,352,606 cans of milk, each can containing forty quarts, and 43,994 cans of cream.

And all of this is milked, gathered, cooled, shipped, and distributed under the most hygienic conditions. If the milk were kept and handled one-half as carefully after it arrives at the consumer's home, there would never be any trouble.

GROCERS WILL DO CO-OPERATIVE BUYING.

Considerably over a hundred Philadelphians have organized together and formed an association for co-operative buying. The organization meets every Monday night. At that time the jobbers and manufacturers who sell directly to the retailers will be invited to meet the members at an open meeting. A representative of each firm will be admitted separately. He will name the prices at which he will sell his article. The prices will be compared with the prices of other firms and the organization will buy as a whole, the status of each retail merchant being equal. The lowest bidder on soap, or sugar or flour, or whatever article is being considered, will be the supply house for the association at that time. It is one of the purposes of the association to eradicate the competition among the retailers to a certain extent and to make more keen the competition among wholesalers. The association will buy more than usual. All excess stock on hand is placed in a warehouse and the grocer who does not need a certain article Monday, but who finds a sudden demand for it later in the week buys it from the association, drawing his stock from the warehouse. Through this method the lowest possible figures on groceries are obtained and the household buyer shares in the benefits derived.

FATTENING POULTRY.

The methods used by most of the large establishments in fattening poultry in this country is to feed the chickens in crates from troughs according to information collected by the United States Department of Agriculture. From six to ten birds are placed in each division of the battery or feeding coop, depending on the size of the birds and the ideas of the feeder. Two or three chickens do better in a division together than when only one bird is placed in each compartment, and the cost of equipment and labor per bird varies inversely with the number of birds in each division. Another method which is used to a considerable extent on a small scale in this country is pen fattening. This method is adapted for use on the farm where the farmer does not care to go to the trouble of crate fattening, or where the price received for well fed birds does not warrant the extra labor and feed cost of the crate method. Most milk-fed chickens are fed for fourteen days, but results indicate a more profitable gain can be secured in a shorter fattening period, provided the same cost per pound can be obtained for the finished product. Practically all of the special feeding in this country involves the use of milk, thus producing milk-fed chickens. Milk, while the least expensive, seems to be the most essential constituent of the ration, and when a feeder cannot get milk in some form he generally does not attempt to fatten poultry commercially. Fresh buttermilk, condensed buttermilk and skim milk are preferred in this relative order. The feed is mixed to the consistency of thick cream, or so that it will drip from the end of a wooden spoon. Rations of 50 per cent. corn meal, 40 per cent. low grade wheat flour and 10 per cent. fine shorts; or of 58 per cent. corn meal, 36 per cent. oat flour and six per cent. of tallow by weight, give very good results, giving gains which cost from 6.45 to 7.74 cents per pound. Low grade wheat flour is a more economical feed than oat flour at the present prices of grain. The results of extensive fattening tests conducted in the middle west, showing the methods of feeding and the cost of grains, are given in Bulletin 140 of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture.

SHOULD PAY FOR DELIVERIES.

The Retailers' Journal, a publication devoted to the interest of the merchant generally, recently contained the following article on the manner in which some customers of grocery and other stores abuse the delivery system and suggesting a remedy:

"Every retail grocer knows, and everyone else with a grain of common sense knows, that it is not right to compel Mr. Brown to pay for the delivery of Mr. Smith's goods.

"Yet the retail grocer persists in charging the man who takes home his goods, for the delivery of goods to his neighbor.

"This, of course, is not a direct charge, yet it works out that way in practice. In the long run the retail grocer must get paid for fair and unfair deliveries, and his pay comes out of the general trade, the man who has no deliveries paying just as much for his goods as the man who demands and receives extraordinary service in the matter of deliveries.

"As a matter of exact justice and right business dealing all people who have the goods delivered at their homes should pay for the service. There should be added to the cost a fair amount for this service, or the man who receives no such service should get a credit check with his purchases.

"It is not, of course, the ordinary delivery that adds so much to the retail grocer's cost of doing business. It is rather the extraordinary service, and this at least should be paid for.

"The difficulty in carrying out this reform lies in the fact that this custom is almost universal among grocers. One grocer probably reasons that if he does not make all the unreasonable deliveries demanded, his competitor will, and as a result he will lose trade.

"All of which difficulty might be removed by an agreement. If all retail grocers in a neighborhood would agree to charge for deliveries, more especially the extraordinary service, the man who did not ask for this service would be benefited as well as the grocer himself.

"If people persist in demanding extraordinary service, it is only fair that they should have it—and pay for it."

DAIRY TRAINS BENEFICIAL.

The running of dairy trains and the work that is being accomplished through this medium is thus described in an editorial appearing in "Kimball's Dairy Farmer:"

"The dairy train is coming to be recognized as a regular educational factor throughout Iowa. Each winter sees a new campaign of this kind undertaken. When the dairy trains were first undertaken the atmosphere of novelty drew many, especially the idle curiosity seekers that are found in every locality. Now people are coming not to satisfy their desire for novelty, but to learn. They sit through the lectures which, at best, are always too short and strive to adapt the instruction to their own needs. This is the interesting part of the entire work. It is with willingness the people take hold of the truth and seek to put it into actual operation on their farms. The dairy train is the outgrowth of certain modern conditions which had their inception in the farmers' institute and later in the short course. The organizations are good in themselves, but cannot in the very nature of things supply the demand of the majority of the people. One speaker in a farmers' institute may speak to three or four hundred people in a day while the same man upon a dairy train may stop at four or five towns and speak to a thousand people in each town. The first dairy trains were merely coaches in which lectures were given. To-day the train consists of a series of cars carrying the best examples of dairy cattle and showing the most approved barn equipment, the best types of silos and the apparatus for the weighing and testing of milk. Further than this there are cars for the accommodation for the force en route. These usually consist of a sleeper and diner. Then there is the baggage car which is provided for the care of the necessary luggage and the equipment not always in use. Meetings are held each evening at some hall and at this the lectures are illustrated with the stereopticon. This gives an opportunity to study on the screen the very best types of stock, buildings and farms. The balance of the train is made of lecture coaches, usually three in number. The burden of the majority of the talks is the necessity of knowing the capacity of each cow. Advice is given as to how this is determined and necessary equipment shown and its operation explained. In most of the towns there is also a dairy cow demonstration, using some of the animals that are carried in the stable car. On the whole the dairy train is quite a formidable institution and it carries to thousands of people every year the most approved dairy knowledge."

CREAMERY SANITATION.

The following circular has been issued by the dairy division, United States Department of Agriculture:

There is no place where sanitation is more necessary and needs more consideration than in the creamery. The products manufactured or prepared therein are very susceptible to contamination from insanitary surroundings, and after such infection has developed may spread disease among consumers, to say nothing of the losses sustained through poor products turned out from the insanitary factories. Creamery operators would generally find it to their advantage to pay more attention to this important matter than is being done at the present time, because of the increase in the value of products that could be secured as well as from a sanitary standpoint. In building creameries careful attention should be to the construction, for if properly constructed it is much easier to keep the surroundings in a sanitary condition and in any event a certain standard of sanitation must always be maintained. Creameries should always be provided with suitable and sufficient drainage properly equipped with traps for disposing of the sewage. Also a system of ventilation that will carry off quickly steam and other vapors as well as offensive and obnoxious odors that may be present. Floors made of concrete or similar material are desirable and should always be kept clean. Walls, partitions, platforms and stairways should be kept clean and painted, and when the material used in any part of the structure becomes old and decayed it should be replaced with new. Doors and windows should be washed frequently and provision should be made for protecting the interior of the building and the products from flies. Walks and outside platforms should be always kept clean to prevent tracking dirt into the building. All utensils used in the handling of milk, cream or butter should be thoroughly cleansed each day by washing in warm water with a suitable cleaning material, then thoroughly sterilized with live steam. Pumps and pipes used for conveying milk or cream should be of the sanitary type and should be taken apart and cleaned after use each day. Employees should wear clean clothing and keep their hands clean at all times. They should also give particular attention to their boots and shoes. Creameries should be provided with toilet rooms and dressing rooms but such rooms should be entirely separate from the compartments where butter or other dairy products are handled. No person should be employed in a creamery who is affected with tuberculosis or other communicable disease and any employee suspected of being affected should be examined by a physician immediately. If creamery operators and owners would give more consideration to the various items enumerated and improve the sanitary conditions of their plants, the value of their products would be increased and the cause for much favorable comment, frequently heard, would be removed. As this question is one affecting public health, it will probably receive the attention of health officers sooner or later unless operators make such action unnecessary by removing all causes for complaint.

TRAINING THE SALESMAN.

In these days of keen competition in business of all kinds a high type of salesman is needed to sell goods and some of the big houses of the country are training their salesmen along scientific lines. The following article on the subject is taken from the Retailers' Journal:

"When we consider what the keen competition in modern business has forced the business man of to-day to do in order to keep on the crest of the commercial wave, it is no wonder we find a great many houses giving special attention to the training of salesmen. It was not always so. In fact, the salesman of other days was forced to develop a genius for his work and create his own technique of his business. There was no such thing as standardizing his performance. No elementary rules to guide the embryonic salesman.

"And it may be added that there are still a great many successful business houses that turn men loose in the wholesale grocery field and permit them to grow up in their own way, or discard them for failure to develop into salesmen.

"Under the modern system in force in some of the best jobbing houses in the country, men are developed in a systematic way. The science of the business of salesmanship is treated just as a good teacher would treat any subject to be taught. The principles are pointed out in such a way that the pupil gets, first, a good idea of the theory of salesmanship and when this is put into practice he gets the habit of making the application in a confident way.

"Of course, salesmanship is not an exact science, like mathematics, but there is nevertheless a technique to the business that is of great value to a man, even though he may have a genius for the work.

"Some young men who have an aptitude for salesmanship are often spoiled for the business by getting a bad start and acquiring habits that are emphasized by practice. They destroy much of the good that is in them by applying bad methods that have become a matter of fixed habit. With a good coach, or instructor, these bad habits would never take root. They would be anticipated and destroyed before blossomed into being.

"The type of salesman that was able to sell a satisfactory quantity of goods years ago will have a very small place in the field of salesmanship of the future. The new man who is fast crowding him out may not have such a repertoire of stories, and he may not be as good a mixer, but he will sell goods at less expense than the old-time salesman.

"Salesmanship, according to the best modern thought, is a dignified profession and a man to sell goods need not be a circus performer. His social line to-day and for the future will be of a more refined order. In short, the new salesman to go the pace set by the trained men who sell for modern houses must be trained for his business by a modern educator.

"Those concerns that carry the modern idea of training to a high degree of perfection, compel their salesmen to get a knowledge of the goods they are to sell by hard study. If the new man's line is to be coffee, tea and spices, he is required to learn about these commodities from the soil on which they grow to the uses to which they are put in the kitchen.

"The selling of these goods is made in the first instance a matter of minor importance. Knowledge of their growth, their qualities and the various ways of putting them to use are initial lessons.

"Once the taste for acquiring this knowledge is created the pupil gets with it a habit for reading all the good literature on the subjects in which he has a cultivated interest. This puts him so far above the man with a superficial knowledge that he can always make himself interesting to a prospective buyer by simply telling him things of consequence about his goods. Even if he does not sell goods at that particular time he makes a good impression. He is regarded as a man who understands his business.

"When the man who would be a salesman has learned the importance of knowing his line, the science of selling goods is taught in a systematic way. The big successful concerns that follow something like a training method with the men who are to sell their goods find it pays."

THE COST OF LIVING.

The Rochester Post Express takes the following view of the high cost of living problem:

While the cost of living is a problem of increasing perplexity the world over, it is not always remembered that the ease upon which this age insists is a factor in the result. Even the added cost of having every necessity of life brought to the door as a matter of daily routine, or hurried to the home on telephone request, is of itself considerable. Generally speaking the householder now pays scores of people for services which his forbears performed for themselves; and so it is not only the high cost of living nowadays and the cost of high living which makes the world feel poor, but the price paid for easy living must also be taken into account. But perhaps if people were still content to live as their fathers did, life would be too placidly easy in this age of improved machinery and methods, and there would be no struggle to bring out much of all that is most admirable in mankind. Life might be as vegetative as it is in the tropics; for it was not by accident that the civilized belt of earth has always been just below the line of northern snow.

BREAD MADE FROM SAWDUST.

There is a bakery in the city of Berlin that turns out daily 20,000 loaves of sawdust, which is used as food for horses. The composition of these is one-third rye flour. It is claimed that in case of a famine such "bread" would be sufficiently nutritive for human beings and not at all disagreeable. Indeed, sawdust bread is not in its ingredients, perhaps, very different from certain food that savages extract from the bark of trees. The marrow of the sago palm furnishes a kind of white bread or flour. In Lapland a great delicacy is a little round cake made of the rind of the palm tree very finely pounded and cooked in a frying pan. In Kamschatka this rind serves the purpose of bread as does also that of the common birch. In Siberia bread is made of a kind of moss which grows on the trunks of the fir. After this has been sprinkled with water it commences to ferment and forms balls the size of a man's head and is then cooked in deep ovens made of stones, the walls of which are first well heated. Travelers who have eaten this food say that it is not unpleasant to the palate.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Retail Merchants' Association of Fayetteville, N. Y., according to the Grocers' Magazine, is engaged in getting up a credit rating book. The collection department of this association makes monthly reports to its members, giving the names of debtors who have failed to settle during the month, but not rating the claims as uncollectible or stopping their efforts to collect. After diligent efforts at collection have been made and have failed and judgment has been secured on the claims, the latter are advertised for sale in the newspapers. The moral of all this is that trusting irresponsible people is bad business. Any grocer who trusts Tom, Dick or Harry without first looking up their records is several years behind the times, the most surprising thing about it being that he is still able to stay at the old stand.

The vast importance to the army of proper food and canning, both from the standpoint of health and economy—in reduced cost, losses and transportation—it may be stated that the amount of canned goods used by the army of the Philippines during their occupation of nearly fourteen years has been approximately 23,000,000 cans of milk, 16,000,000 cans of vegetables, 7,000,000 cans of meats, 6,000,000 cans of fruit, 5,000,000 cans of fish, 600,000 cans of baked beans and 500,000 cans of soups. This makes a grand total of 58,100,000 cans and if the quantity of canned foods consumed by the army in other territory outside the Philippines is considered, it would doubtless equal, if not exceed, the figures quoted, and make the grand total of consumption largely in excess of 100,000,000 cans, during the period reckoned from the beginning of the Spanish-American war.

No cherries can be labeled "Maraschino" according to a recent government decision, unless they are Marasca cherries preserved in Maraschino, a liquor prepared for the distillation of the Marasca cherry. According to this decision a large proportion of the so-called Maraschino cherries will have to be put up differently, it is said.

A united effort will be made by the tomato growers of the eastern shore of Maryland to raise the price of that product the coming season, furnished the canning houses. Some time ago 300 farmers in the vicinity of Denton and Ridgely, Caroline county, this being the banner tomato country in the state, met, and after discussion, signed an agreement not to plant tomatoes the coming season for less than $11 a ton. This is $2 more than the price received last year, while only a few years ago they were grown freely in this section for $6.50 a ton.

According to the Confectioners' Journal, a correspondent who has traveled extensively in South America, says that the producers and shippers of the cacao bean comment with amusement upon our North American persistence in calling this product, which has no relation to the cocoanut, by the wrong name. It is admitted, however, that, in view of the wide-spread advertising and use of cocoa, so-called, in this country, it would be quite impossible to accomplish a change, although cocoa as cacao might in its solid or fluid form taste quite as sweetly.

During the year 1910 the imports of canned goods into the United Kingdom amounted to over 100,000,000 tins condensed milk, 60,000,000 tins salmon, 32,000,000 tins sardines, 22,000,000 tins canned meats, 15,000,000 tins canned fruits, 12,000,000 tins canned tomatoes, 10,000,000 tins canned pineapple, besides a great many other foods in tins.

The American Grocer remarks: If sweet potatoes are too high or too bothersome, you have canned sweets. If beets take too long to cook, you have them already cooked in cans. If dad loves sauer kraut and ma hates the smell in her curtains, ten cents buys a quart can, and fifteen minutes in boiling water does the trick. If fussing with fresh spinnach is tiresome and time wasted, here is a large can of gritless, large leaf, full flavored article equal almost to a peck cut, cleaned and cooked the same forenoon for 12 or 15 cents.

Authorities claim that there is no devise or machine with which eggs can be tested in large quantities and in a short time. Each egg must be tested by hand individually. Some experienced egg testers are very rapid in this work. A machine was recently submitted to the New York egg trade for the rapid testing of eggs, but it was pronounced a failure.

The past calendar year proved a record one for the Victorian dairying industry. Dairymen received $2,700,000 more for their produce exported in 1911 than for 1910, itself a record year. Butter exported from Victoria to all destinations for 1911 totaled 24,723 tons, worth $13,475,221, against 19,761 tons, worth $10,770,673 for 1910. London cables report unusually high prices for this time of year, as well as a lively market, with indications of its continuance. The prospects are, therefore, most encouraging for dairymen.

Prof. John Michels has resigned as editor of the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal to accept a position as instructor in a Wisconsin county agricultural school. He is succeeded by R. G. Jones, an Iowa product.

According to the Galeston Tribune, a pelican after eating all the fish it could swallow, caught six more fish in its pouch, weighing about ten pounds, which anchored the bird so that some sportsmen in a motor launch were able to catch it. They took the fish—four trout, a redfish and a mullet, and had them for dinner.

Dr. Hume, head of the Egyptian geological survey, says in an article in the Cairo Scientific Journal, that government engineers constructing a bridge while boring for the erection of the piers came across the remains of an old building on which were found clinging a large number of oysters of a giant species. Some of them have almost perfect mother-of-pearl. They belong to what is called the Aetheria nidotica, and traces of this species are to be found all over Egypt above the present level of the Nile. Their existence in such places has greatly helped scientists in determining the previous courses of the river.

The California State Fish and Game Commission, according to Sacramento advices, is preparing to receive 2,000,000 salmon eggs at its new hatchery below the above named city, where recent experiments with 50,000 eggs proved successful. Ninety-five per cent. of these eggs were hatched and the baby salmon were recently released into the Sacramento river.

Henry Wisner, an American, of Oregon City, Ore., has been appointed director of fisheries of Uruguay under a five year's contract with the government. Two American foremen are to accompany him and the vessels to be operated in connection with the work have been purchased in the United States.

Mackerel shipped from Ireland to the United States several years ago exceeded that from all other sources. Recently the price for Irish cured mackerel has receded in Ireland, while value of the latter have been maintained in all other markets. Owing to the fish not being in good condition on reaching the consuming public, together with large increase in the Norwegian export of recent years, the exports of Irish mackerel have been steadily on the decrease.

The government has announced in a recent decision that henceforth teas that were not artificially colored would be admitted in spite of the fact that they might contain a small quantity of artificial color. The Treasury Department still desires to exclude all tea that is colored for the purpose of deceiving buyers, but it will not exclude such tea as may show some coloring matter which may have entered by being packed in containers which previously held colored tea. Accordingly the Treasury Department has adopted what is known as the "Read method," with additions and modifications, for examination of tea.

Foodstuffs containing benzoate of soda cannot henceforth be sold in Indiana. The right of the state to prohibit their sale was upheld by Edward Daniels, master in chancery, in a report to the federal court of his findings in a suit brought against the state food commissioner and the state board of health by several food companies which sought to restrain the state from enforcing the law which bars such food from sale.

There was a heavy increase in the failures of grocery and general stores for the month of February. The official report of such failures shows: General store failures, 195, with considerably over a million dollars liabilities; grocery store failures, 243, with liabilities of $1,021,402.

When a person buys fresh fish in Copenhagen he really gets them. More than that, he gets uncontaminated fish. The sewers used to empty into the sea at the nearest convenient points. Now the sewage is collected into a main trunk line and carried two kilometers out to sea before it is released. This enables vessels full of live fish to come close to shore and right into the town. Very pretty tessellated tile tanks filled with running water have been constructed and here the smaller fish swim about. The larger fish, such as cod and halibut, are too cumbersome to keep alive and are therefore placed in cold storage rooms.

A writer in one of the dairy publications, with plenty of time on his hands, has been collecting some statistics relative to the consumption of milk in this country. He says that instead of being a nation of beer guzzlers we are a nation of milk drinkers. According to this writer we consume annually, in the raw state alone, twenty billion pounds of milk or ten billion quarts, one hundred and twenty-five quarts to every man, woman and child. Our total production is nearly seven hundred billion pounds, of which we consume in the form of different dairy products about three-fourths. New York city alone uses three million pounds of milk every twenty-four hours. Twenty or thirty years ago the supply was produced within a radius of fifty miles but now it is necessary to go almost to the Canadian border.

The average price of a quart of milk in bulk is eight and one-third cents. A quart of beer in bulk, when the purchaser furnishes the pail, costs ten cents, or if purchased by the glass, twenty cents. An equivalent amount of proteid (nitrogenous) material in the form of milk (four ounces) costs one cent and in the form of meat about one and one-half cents, while an equivalent amount of carbohydrates (starch and sugar) in the form of bread (four ounces) costs about one and one-quarter cents. Assuming that the alcohol of the beer is entirely utilized, and that it does not harm any of the normal processes, it is found that in calculated food value each quart of beer costing ten cents is equivalent to twenty-three ounces of milk costing six cents. It can be seen, therefore, that beer when purchased in bulk costs 66 per cent. more than milk or 233 per cent. more when beer is purchased by the glass.

From time to time the Department of Agriculture has received inquiries asking whether or not it is permissible under the Food and Drugs act to label cottonseed oil as "sweet oil." Investigations have shown that some samples marked "sweet oil" consist of cottonseed oil or a mixture of olive oil and cottonseed oil. A careful consideration of the subject leads the Board of Food and Drugs Inspection to the conclusion that the only oil to which the term of "sweet oil" may be correctly applied is olive oil.

The high price of potatoes is due to the scant home supply. Ordinarily the price averages 55 cents. Government figures as to the home supply show that in 1911 it was 205,936,000 bushels; in 1910, 249,760,000 bushels; in 1909, 276,133,000 bushels. Prices are consistent with the decreased supply of course: January, 1912, as against January, 1911, per bushel, 90 to 37 cents in Maine; 91 to 44 cents in New York; 98 to 57 cents in Virginia, and $1.08 to 65 cents in Massachusetts.

Twenty-five million dollars worth of creamery butter, as much dairy butter and $3,000,000 worth of ice cream is about the wealth created by the dairy cow in the state of Iowa the past year. State Dairy Commissioner Barney said recently that this amount could be increased fully $37,500,000 a year by weeding out poor milk cows and using pure bred sires.

The Elgin (Ill.) Daily News recently carried an eighteen page advertisement of a large retail grocery firm of that city. This is a record ad. when the nature, the merchandise and the size of the town are considered.

A Japanese confectioner in South Formosa makes claim to having discovered a process by which bananas can be canned. As canned or conserved bananas have never been satisfactorily put up the new process will be watched with interest.

Dr. A. D. Melvin, chief of Federal Bureau of Animal Industry, in a recent bulletin says that at least 10 per cent. of the dairy cows of this country are afflicted with tuberculosis. If this statement is true it is an appalling one.

Claiming a desire to prevent if possible a monopoly in the necessities of life and to show to what extent the cost of living is due to large profits made by dealers, a bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature, requiring all corporations not common carriers, selling or delivering butter, eggs, milk, bread, meat, coal and ice, to file annual statements with the Secretary of State. The statements are to go into the amount of stocks and bonds issued, the net income and the fixed charges, dividends declared and the amounts added to the surplus. The filing of a false or fraudulent report is made a misdemeanor, and failure to file such a report will make the corporation liable to a fine of $5,000.

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING MAY.

During the month of May Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust ordered ninety prosecutions for offenses against the pure food laws of the Commonwealth. While the bureau would be greatly pleased to go before the people with the record of a month in which no prosecutions of any sort have been ordered it must take human nature as it finds it and when men disregard law the inevitable consequences follow.

One Allegheny county dealer will be tried on the charge of selling Hamburger steak containing added sulphites.

Six prosecutions were ordered under the provisions of the non-alcoholic drink act. These offenses were committed in Allegheny, Berks and Schuylkill counties. One was for the sale of fruit cider, an alcoholic beverage preserved with benzoic acid and sold as a non-alcoholic drink; the others were for the sale of various brands of pop containing saccharin.

Allegheny, Lackawanna, Luzerne and Montgomery counties furnished seven alleged violations of the oleomargarine act. One arrest was for the sale of oleomargarine without license, three for the sale of this compound colored in imitation of yellow butter and three for its sale as yellow butter, colored.

Under the general pure food law of the State the prosecutions ordered numbered twenty-nine. The victims do business in Allegheny, Bedford, Berks, Blair, Dauphin, Erie, Lawrence, Mercer, Northumberland, Philadelphia and Warren counties. There was one case of the sale of cucumbers that were decomposed and unfit for food; another of the sale of chicken under precisely similar circumstances; one prosecution for the sale of pie and cake uncovered and exposed to dirt; one for the sale of "olive" oil made of cottonseed oil; one for the sale of misbranded Maraschino cherries; four for the sale of flour containing nitrous acid; nine for the sale of dried apricots containing sulphur dioxide, and ten for the sale of dried peaches similarly adulterated.

The prosecutions ordered under the cream and milk law were brought in Allegheny, Berks, Cambria, Chester, Delaware, Erie, Huntingdon, Lancaster, Schuylkill, Somerset, Washington and Westmoreland counties and numbered forty-seven. Of these thirty were for the sale of milk low in solids, skimmed; seven for the sale of cream low in butter-fat; five for the sale of milk low in solids; two for the sale of watered milk; one for the sale of condensed milk made from skimmed milk; one for the sale of evaporated milk made from partially skimmed milk, and one for the sale of cream adulterated with evaporated milk.

The number of prosecutions brought for violations of the milk and cream act continues to confirm the wisdom of the promoters of the act. It is universally admitted that the one article of milk is of such universal use and its effects upon the human system so great that purity is essential. Milk is a general necessity. Thus far no substitute has been discovered. A determined effort should be made by the various state governments and also by the federal Department of Agriculture to put an end to existing carelessness and to assist and encourage dairymen in the production and sale of milk that will stand every legitimate test. The enactment of the present State law was meant to protect the children, the aged and the feeble from the consequences of drinking impure or adulterated milk. No effort will be spared to prosecute offenders with the utmost rigor.

The attention of dealers in food products is called to that section of the law which requires that all articles exposed to sale and liable to contamination by flies, dust from the streets or from other sources must be properly protected. There has been much carelessness among dealers during the past. It is purposed to enforce it during the present season and those who would save themselves trouble, humiliation and expense will do well to keep their goods adequately protected. It requires very little effort and scarcely any expense to meet this reasonable requirement. Consumers should decline to patronize those whose counters or stands show unprotected food products surrounded by multitudes of flies.

THE MANUFACTURE OF CONFECTIONERY.

The following paper was read by James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, before the Pennsylvania Manufacturing Confectioners' Association, Friday, May 24, 1912, at Harrisburg, Pa.:

Mr. President and Members of the Pennsylvania Manufacturing Confectioners' Association: I am greatly honored by the invitation to address you upon this important occasion, your first organization meeting. Permit me to congratulate you upon this progressive step on your part. I believe most thoroughly in organization, and Pennsylvania, with its great chocolate and other confectionery manufacturing business affords an excellent field for a live, working up-to-date association of these interests. Only through organization can you steadily and consistently move forward together in your business—a business important not only because of its volume, but also because of its relations to the health and happiness of the people and especially of the young people of this great State.

I am going to use the few moments to which I shall limit myself, to present for your thought some of the things that look to me, as an official guardian of Pennsylvania's food supply, important for you to do as an organized body.

See to it that all undesirable and useless substances are kept out of your products. See, also, that your factories are made models for the sanitary production of food supplies. Allow me to suggest for your consideration the wise activity of the National Canners' Association along these lines, and the valuable results to that branch of the food making business. Note also the fact that the meat packers, who felt in 1906 that the National Meat Inspection Act was most fairly drastic, now admit that the reputation for the wholesomeness and cleanliness of their products under the new conditions, has helped greatly to increase the volume of their business.

Respecting undesirable materials, allow me to speak of the resinous glazes sometimes used—materials of no food value, and of character and origin far from desirable in food ingredients, because of their undesirable sanitary history and effects, and because of their probable interference with the best digestive results. This matter is really in your hands. The retailer knows nothing about it. A gentleman of my acquaintance, in a recent conversation with a department store merchant, noted with approval the absence of the glaze from the Easter goods of this year. The merchant remarked: "Yes, they are not so nice as they were." My friend said, "Well, I think they are much better. I do not want my children to eat that varnish, in many cases the same as our floor varnish." "What," said the merchant, "I didn't know that. I didn't know how it was done."

In the same connection, try to keep down the making of imitation chocolate and imitation cocoanut goods, and the like, unless you can both keep them harmless, nutritious and salable to the retail buyer for what they are. A truthful label for such goods on the wholesale package gives no information to the retail buyer, and he is disappointed in the goods. Why profit to-day by this ultimate deception, when to-morrow you must pay the price in lost trade? Keep out, therefore, the ochres and cereal cocoanut imitation.

Again, avoid deceiving the people by giving them large pieces for low price by the substitution of inferior materials in place of such as are normal to candy.

Another point: You are all aware of the dirty little shops and dusty, unprotected street stands from which, too often, an unhealthy, dirty fingered vendor doles out penny goods to the children from the neighborhood school house. You don't want your children to buy under such conditions; nor does any careful parent. You cannot clean the shop, cover the street stand, or compel the vendor to bathe and keep healthy; but why should you not put up the kind of goods thus retailed in clean, paraffin paper wrappers and thus protect them from dirt and disease until the consumer gets them?

I shall not weary you by further detailed suggestion. Allow me to note, however, that the people are to-day very much awake on these matters. You have doubtless read the planks in the State platforms of both political organizations, calling for more drastic food laws. Why not get ready for this, take such action now as will satisfy the people that the goods put up by your members and with your approval shall be beyond all reasonable criticism, and that you are constantly watchful of their interests, rather than solely of the fatness of your own pocketbooks.

I desire, in closing, to express my gratification at the attitude shown by most of your members of readiness to improve the quality of your goods at point of criticism. I believe that most of you think not only of the money you are after, but also, with pride, of the excellence of your products, and, with serious minds, of your responsibilities for the health and satisfaction of those who eat your delicious confections.

THE VALUE OF MILK AS A FOOD.

The following extracts from an article on The Value of Milk as a Food are taken from an article appearing in a recent issue of Hoard's Dairyman:

A noted divine in remarking recently upon the divergence between science and religion said that for his part he was glad they did not agree because scientists changed their ideas every few years. It is somewhat that way with the medical fraternity with regard to food. Ideas differ widely in non-essentials, while in the essentials all agree. At the same time accepted standards of yesterday do not find entire favor at the present moment. So one must, as in most things in life, sift and try for himself, since what agrees with one person does not agree with another. Milk, which is an excellent food for most people, may not agree with some individual in particular. Its results, as a rule are beneficial. Occasionally we find one who does not care for it at all, this however being the exception.

One mistake sometimes entertained in the minds of enthusiasts is that milk is a perfect food. For the young of the species that produces it this is undoubtedly true. Human milk is a perfect food for the human infant, cow's milk for the newly born calf, but cow's milk is not a perfect food for the young of the human family.

Milk contains its full nutritive power only when freshly drawn from the cow, when it is at 98 degrees Fahrenheit, the temperature required by the stomach for perfect digestion. Heating the milk later may produce the proper temperature but not the other conditions present only in fresh milk.

Taken into the stomach milk is promptly curdled by the juices there. When consumed rapidly or in quantity, it coagulates in the stomach and does not break up sufficiently in its passage through the alimentary canal. In this way the digestive juices cannot act upon the mass as they would were the lumps smaller. This is why milk should always be supped or drunk very slowly. In eating bread with the milk the formation of large masses is not liable to occur, and the food is more easily assimilated by the digestive organs. Thorough mastication even of bread and milk is recommended.

Milk alone is not considered a perfect food for adults, but it is healthful and wholesome if pure. A milk diet gives the stomach rest but sometimes causes constipation. Olive oil will be found a corrective of this condition taken in tablespoonful doses three or four times a day. Such a diet it is claimed will cure a cold right speedily, taking milk exclusively, sipping one or two glasses every two hours.

A noted authority makes a statement somewhat surprising to the average mind and it is that acid fruits do not cause disturbance when taken strictly with milk alone. The trouble comes from mixing hearty food with milk and fruit.

Speaking of pasteurized milk this authority quoted states that it is not desirable. He classes pasteurized milk as a "starvation food." Skim milk, according to the same authority, is really a wonderful product, of little less value than the whole milk. Besides being nourishing as a food, robbed only of its fat, it is a complete preservative for meats and other decomposable products. A Chicago scientist declares the thin film-like covering deposited on a fresh egg, when dipped into it will keep it fresh for a year. The milk is not only deprived of its fat but of its bacteria before being used for this purpose.

As hot weather comes on, those who like fresh buttermilk and can get it are fortunate. To those who enjoy this sub-acid beverage, it carries a sure passport on a hot day. Nothing could be more refreshing. Those possessed of a rheumatic or gouty tendency will benefit by partaking freely of one quart or more a day and it cannot fail of being a benefit. Three quarts daily is better. For correcting obesity it is highly recommended.

So while whole milk is nourishing and wholesome, buttermilk is both of these and does not only prevent the taking on of surplus fat but actually reduces it when present. Let our corpulent brothers and sisters take to buttermilk and note the result.

TOMATO-SEED OIL.

According to a report from Consul L. J. Keena, Florence, Italy, a new oil which has made its appearance on the market was until recently unknown. The oil is extracted from tomato seeds. Especially in Italy is it possible to obtain considerable quantities of this oil, owing to the extensive cultivation of the tomato. The province of Parma alone conserves 84,000 tons of tomatoes, the residue from which thrown away until a short time ago, has yielded 600 tons of oil.

From a chemical standard tomato-seed oil is classed as a dry-seed oil of the type of cotton-seed oil. It will find therefore an immediate employment in soap making and in all industries where cotton-seed or similar oil is used.

The consul says investigating the matter he has found that the oil mentioned is not known at all in the local market. The Chamber of Commerce of Parma writes that the industry is as yet in the experimental stage. From the experiments and tests which have already been made they are, nevertheless, certain of the success of the new industry.

This tomato-seed oil should appear on the local market this coming fall, and its success there will undoubtedly be at the expense of American cotton-seed oil. Of the 35,801 quintals of cotton-seed oil imported in 1910, 34,272 quintals came from the United States, 899 quintals from England, and 630 quintals from Austria-Hungary.

CANNED PUMPKIN AND ITS POINTS.

Canned pumpkin, says the Interstate Grocer, is usually of fine merit. The pumpkins are cleaned and thoroughly cooked, and then the meat is reduced to a pulp by a machine used for that purpose. It is then carefully screened and strained in order to take out all hull and other useless parts, put into cans and hermetically sealed. It was formerly the case that pumpkin had an admixture of corn starch to make it appear firm or solid in the can and of a light color, but the article is no longer used as a filler; neither is any other adulterant as there is scarcely anything which could be used that costs as little as pumpkin.

Pumpkin which is firm and can be sliced with a knife when turned out of a can on a dish is either compressed by machinery or stiffened with corn starch.

The pumpkin belongs to the gourd family of vegetables, as does the squash, and both have been used for food for man and animals since history began, and both are grown in all parts of the world. They are wholesome and nutritious and deserve a much wider use than they have so far attained. Pumpkins in cans should be of a deep golden color, somewhat darker than the natural yellow color of the flesh of the pumpkin as cooking darkens the color slightly. It should be of a moist consistency, but not too moist, just so it can be stirred with a spoon in the can and that it will heap up moderately when poured in a dish. It should be free of black streaks or discoloration and of specks, and should be so pulped that its consistency is smooth and of fine texture and not lumpy or shredded. It should be of natural flavor.

RIGHT USE OF COFFEE BENEFICIAL.

The latest study of the effects of caffeine on the human body has been done by Dr. H. L. Hollingworth, an instructor in Columbia University, after a forty days' experiment with a poison squad of sixteen. The results of the investigation will be set forth in a monograph as a number of the archives of Columbia University. According to Dr. Hollingsworth's deductions caffeine is the only known stimulant that quickens the functions of the human body without a subsequent period of depression. "The only explanation of this so far as I know," said Dr. Hollingsworth, "is that caffeine acts as a lubricator of the nervous system, having an actual physical action whereby the nerves are enabled to do their work more easily. Other stimulants act on the nerves themselves, and consequently, according to Nature's law, a period of depression follows, and the whole process tends to injure the human machine. Our experiments at Columbia show that not in a single instance has a depression followed the use of caffeine.

"However, this verdict in favor of caffeine must not be considered as an endorsement of drinking too much coffee, because coffee, as well as tea, contains other elements that act as stimulants."

NET WEIGHT LAW.

New York now has a net weight container law. Just before the Legislature adjourned a law was passed which requires the net weight to be stamped on the container in which all food products are sold. The bill was signed by Governor Dix. According to the Retailers' Journal the measure takes in all products marketed for food purposes, including meats, meat products, butter, etc. All other commodities not in containers shall be sold by standard weight, standard measure or count. In a limited way the law protects the retailer who has a written guarantee from the manufacturer that the weights marked on containers are correct. This provision applies only to manufacturers within the state, as the state has no jurisdiction over articles manufactured beyond its borders. Reasonable allowance is made for shrinkage on certain kinds of goods that are subject to change on account of atmospheric and other conditions. While there is little complaint from either the manufacturer or retailer against the provisions of the bill many of them think it unfortunate that the several states instead of the federal government should pass such bills. It is claimed by manufacturers and retailers that it is a great hardship to compel them to do business under a variety of laws when one law would answer the purpose.

CITY HEALTH DEPARTMENTS.

Considerable interest is being manifested by retail grocers all over the country respecting the action of the various health departments, says the Retailers' Journal. The retail grocer has become accustomed to the pure food department inspections and does not mind them. He is buying pure food and he doesn't care who knows it. In fact, he is more than glad to have a reasonable pure food man come in and look his stock over. But the city health officer is a comparatively new man on the job. He has been fairly moderate in his demands in the past, but he has been growing radical in the matter of hygiene. People have had a fly scare and a dust scare. Every retail grocer fit to be in business believes in sanitary stores and this class of dealers spend much time and money in trying to make their places of business attractive. But they can't stop the wagons from kicking up a dust as they pass their stores and they can't stop the wind from blowing the dust on their goods. Of course, they can and do protect their goods from dust and they stop business occasionally to sweep out the mud the people bring into the store on their shoes. Do what he may the retail grocer cannot run his business up to the standard of hygiene some of our nice health officers set up for them. All the retail grocers ask of the health officers is that they be reasonable in their demands.

HOW TO JUDGE PORK.

There is as much difference in pork as there is in butter, remarks a trade journal. This in spite of the fact that less attention is generally given to the selection of pork than any other meat. "Pork is pork," is the common opinion among the masses. Nothing, however, could be more erroneous. The finest quality of the meat is that which comes from hogs that live on mast and wander about at will in wooded land. The varied diet of nuts, wild fruits, shrubs and grasses, not gulped down at once, but eaten slowly and at frequent intervals throughout the day, has a tendency to make the meat more firm than that of the penned-up hogs. And the fat, instead of laying in heavy gobs upon the outer surface, is spread over the carcass in thin appetizing layers. As a natural consequence the flavor of the meat is infinitely superior to that of the porker which has been confined to a pen and the diet which the farmer is obliged to feed his stock. There is no finer pork anywhere than that which comes from the mountainous sections of southeastern Kentucky. Here the hogs are allowed to roam at will and are not infrequently found in a wild state. The country is well provided with beech nuts, acorns and mast of a general nature; and the hogs, traveling about in droves of a dozen or more, must walk and work for their sustenance. It is to this constant exercise that the meat of these hogs owes much of its firmness, and also the interlarded, lean and fat condition that runs in even streaks through the body. Another variety of pork which is in great demand among connoisseurs is that of the razorback, a large, poor looking hog which runs semi-wild in the woodlands of Arkansas and Mississippi and in certain parts of Tennessee, Missouri and Virginia. The reason for the excellence of this kind of pork is much the same as that given above, in referring to the hogs of southeastern Kentucky.

The hogs that are penned in and given their feed at regular intervals without having to move any farther than the trough to get it, get lazy and fatten quickly, but the fat lays on in gobs and does not flavor or benefit the meat as it does when distributed through the lean. It may be said in general that hogs when permitted to gather their mast in the open and more particularly in wooded land, will produce pork as far superior to that of the barnyard as cheese is superior to chalk. In selecting pork attention should be given to the interlarding of the fat through the meat. When the fat lies in gobs on the outside of the lean, you have before you a specimen of the pen-fed pork. And it should be said that this latter kind forms easily 85 per cent. of the kind that reaches our markets. Pork of any kind should be cooked on a slow fire, so that the heart of the meat shall be given plenty of time to boil or bake without overdoing the outer surface. In the baking of pork, the use of a roaster or any pan with a cover to preserve the savory juices and moisture is invaluable, and to those housewives who find it difficult to attain success in the baking of meats, retailers should recommend the covered bake oven. But they should make it plain to their customers that in order to be properly prepared and palatable, pork should be very well done and cooked on a slow fire.

CHEESE—A NEGLECTED FOOD.

One of the most common articles of diet is cheese, and yet its value is little appreciated by the general public, remarks the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal. One cannot say, in fairness, that cheese has not won favor in this country; for an article that is found in some quality or another in almost every American home and the yearly output of which is nearly 300,000,000 pounds in the United States with a value of $29,000,000, cannot be regarded as entirely unpopular. Despite these enormous figures, there is a prevalent current belief that cheese is prone to produce physiologic effects and that, as the expression goes, it is "hard to digest."

The nutrition experts of the United States Department of Agriculture have been investigating the cause of the American public versus cheese. The facts and findings are essentially as follows: Cheese of various types, eaten raw or cooked, compares favorably with other foods in thoroughness of digestion in healthy man. It does not cause constipation or induce other physiologic effects even when eaten in abundance. Cheese is more than readily digestible; it is highly nutritious, comparing in this respect with other combinations like meat, fish, eggs, and above this, cheese is an economical food, competing with the foregoing from the standpoint of cost and nutritive efficiency. If the causes for the familiar indifference to cheese as a more central feature of the diet are sought they probably lie in part, according to the Journal of the American Medical Association, in the continued popularity of the more expensive meat in this country and it is a fact that our housekeepers lack in the culinary experience which would bring cheese into a more prominent role on the bill of fare.

SHORT POUNDS OF BUTTER.

Fifteen and a half ounces of butter will hereafter constitute a legal pound in Montana, the state board of health at a meeting recently deciding to allow half an ounce for evaporation. This point has been under consideration for months by the board, the butter manufacturers insisting that in every pound there is a certain percentage of moisture, and that allowance for its having evaporated by the time the package reaches the consumer should be made by the board, else they would be constantly liable for having sold short weight, whereas the packages weighed a full pound upon leaving the creamery.

The board has also decided to begin rigidly enforcing the pure food regulations governing creameries, butcher shops, restaurants and other places. The conclusion was reached that enough time has elapsed since the regulations were promulgated to allow all persons affected to make the necessary changes. From now on criminal prosecutions will be instituted against all persons failing to conform to the regulations drafted by the board to make the pure food laws effective.

BUTTER PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES.

There were 1,620,766,000 pounds of butter, valued at $405,000,000, produced on farms and in factories in the United States during the census year of 1909, according to a statement issued by Director Durrand of the Bureau of the Census, Department of Commerce and Labor. It was prepared under the supervision of Le Grand Powers, chief statistician, and John Lee Coulter, expert special agent for agriculture. It gives the totals for the geographic divisions and states separately, and gives notice that the figures of production on farms are preliminary and subject to change in the final tables.

Of the grand total reported the quantity produced on farms was 996,001,000 pounds, valued at $225,544,000. Factories produced 624,765,000 pounds, valued at $179,510,000. Butter manufactured by farmers' co-operative creameries is included in the figures for the factories.

The largest total quantity, 466,352,900 pounds, valued at $112,201,000, was produced by the west north central division. The next largest, 424,102,000 pounds, valued at $108,020,000, was reported by the east north central division. These two divisions produced slightly more than half of the total quantity and earned about the same proportion of the total value. Although the first named division led in total quantity and value, the other area showed a greater percentage from the farms, 230,931,000 pounds, valued at $53,055,000, as compared with 202,801,000 pounds, valued at $45,169,000, reported from the west north central division. On the other hand the other division had a factory production of 243,552,000 pounds, valued at $67,032,000, as against 193,171,000 pounds, valued at $54,965,000, for the east north central. The other divisions, in total quantity and value, each ranked as follows: Middle Atlantic, 165,393,000 pounds, $46,323,000; east south central, 136,792,000 pounds, $28,156,000; west south central, 134,634,000 pounds, $27,710,000; south Atlantic, 125,255,000 pounds, $26,628,000; Pacific, 84,780,000 pounds, $25,708,000; New England, 68,899,000 pounds, $20,231,000; mountain, 34,758,000 pounds, $10,078,000.

Among the states Wisconsin ranked first in total production with 131,049,000 pounds, valued at $36,628,000; it was first also with 103,885,000 pounds, valued at $29,547,000, produced in factories. The difference between the figures given, which is 27,165,000 pounds, valued at $7,081,000, represents Wisconsin's farm production.

In total production Iowa ranked second, Minnesota third, Pennsylvania fourth, Michigan fifth, Ohio sixth, Illinois seventh, New York eighth, Texas ninth, and Indiana tenth.

Texas, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois and Indiana showed a much greater farm production than factory output and ranked in the order written. Minnesota, Iowa and New York, in the order named ranked after Wisconsin in showing a factory production much larger than credited to their farms.

SOME FOOD DERIVATIVES OF MANIOC ROOT.

Turtle and farina, taken together, represent to those who live on the Amazon, be they white, negro or Indian, or one of the numerous cross-breeds, what the salmon does to the Alaskan Indian, the cocoanut to the South Sea Islander and rice to the Mongolian, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times. A short run of salmon in the Alaska rivers, a crop failure in the paddy fields of China, a hurricane in the South Sea islands—all reduce to the same thing—famine. On the Amazon a shortage of turtles may be tided over by a plenty of farina or vice versa; a failure of both turtles and farina in the same year brings great and widespread distress.

Farina is a crude, locally made product of the root of the manioc, a further refinement of which results in the tapioca of commerce. Tapioca is the pure starch of the root; farina the starch mixed with a woody fiber, the latter imparting a yellowish color to the component. Farina under a number of different names, is more or less a staple with the natives in all of tropical America from the West Indies to Paraguay.

The methods of preparation vary slightly in different localities, but the object in view is always the same, the elimination of the juice of the manioc, which is of a highly poisonous nature. Fortunately, the latter is highly soluble, and is easily got rid of by washing and straining. The Brazilian apparatus for the purpose is an Indian arrangement, and is in every respect similar to the one employed by the aborigines of the interior of British Guinea, from 500 to 1,000 miles from the Amazon. It consists of a long, flexible cylinder made of the hard outer skin of some cane-like plant, plaited in such a form that a longitudinal pull reduces its diameter. This, being filled with the moistened pulp of the manico, is contracted by attaching a weight to a loop in its lower end, the juice being caught in pans placed underneath to receive it.

A second washing and pressing renders the farina fit for eating. A rather amusing expedient is occasionally employed by the Indian women to facilitate this operation. A large hammock is suspended between the ends of two cylinders of manioc pulp, and into this are thrown a half dozen or more of the first children to come to hand, the edges of the hammock being then knotted together above the struggling prisoners. Whether the youngsters take their confinement in good part or otherwise, they at least never take it quietly, the ensuing struggles squeezing the manioc dry in a fraction of the time in which it would have been accomplished by the application of a dead weight.

A remarkable thing about the juice of the manioc is that it contains so large a quantity of prussic acid that it is invariably fatal to man, or even dog or cow that happens to drink it, the addition of certain herbs known to the Indians renders it perfectly harmless and admirably suited to the making of sauces and seasonings for fish and turtle. A most delicious sauce is that called arubi, which is made of the manioc juice boiled down before the precipitation of the starch or tapioca, and seasoned with capsicum peppers. It is kept in stone bottles for several weeks before using and makes a most appetising relish. In British Guinea a similar sauce made by the Indians and called "pepper-pot," is highly esteemed by the English and may be had at either of the leading hotels in Georgetown. Another sauce, tupuci, is made by the Amazon Indians from the pure juice of the manioc and is much more common in the interior than arubi. This is made by heating the liquid for several days in succession and seasoning it with peppers and small fishes; when old it has much the taste of anchovy paste and a smell that would put to shame the famous salmon head oil of the Alaska Indians. It is generally made up as a liquid but certain of the tribes of the Japura make it up in the form of a black paste. The Indians of the Tapajos, where fish are scarce, are said to occasionally season tucupi with Sauba ants. It is there used chiefly as a sauce to tacaca, another preparation from the root of the manioc, consisting of the starch beaten up in boiling water.

TEA OIL—WHERE DERIVED AND ITS USES.

An article for which a similar part is destined, says the Spice Mill, to that of the sesame seed—which hardly known ten years ago, to-day occupies second place in the export trade of Hankow, China, and is fifth in the foreign commerce of that country—is tea oil. This oil is extracted from the oil yielding tea shrub, or tea oil tree, a variety of the real tea plant the leaves of which yield the national beverage of the Chinese.

The seed, as large as a hazel nut, is located in round capsules, usually three-fold. It is yellow inside and covered with a brown shell. The cleaned, hulled kernels furnish an oil yield of about 30 per cent., whereas by expressing the raw nut about 20 per cent. can be obtained. Tea seed oil is a pale yellow and has a more or less astringent taste. It belongs to the non-drying oils and in quality resembles olive oil. The saponin substances it contains which are not beneficial to human health, are destroyed by boiling. The oil is consequently used by the Chinese as a food oil. Its employment in domestic food industries is advocated. Soap manufacturers find it a very good raw material as it produces an excellent hard white soap. The presence of saponin is not detrimental, rather increases its lathering and washing power.

As a lubricating oil, this highly non-acid oil that is hardly subject to rancidity, is useful. The seed appears to be practically valueless. The shipment of tea oil from Hunan into the neighboring provinces is quite considerable. The quantity available for foreign export is as yet uncalculated. The principal producing locality is southern and northwestern Hunan.

PROFIT IN BUTTERMILK.

A great many creameries, says the Creamery Journal, are overlooking a nice profit when they sell their buttermilk for ten or fifteen cents a can (10 gallons). The consumption of buttermilk in the cities is growing rapidly, and although manufactured buttermilk is used in many places, wherever fresh creamery buttermilk can be secured lacto is discarded. If you live within a reasonable distance of a city of 10,000 or over you should investigate the proposition of supplying buttermilk for fountain purposes. Some creameries furnish buttermilk in 10 gallon jacket cans for 10 cents a gallon. Some put it up in quart bottles and get 3 cents a quart, and some who put it up in attractive pint bottles to be served over the fountain get 2 cents a pint or 16 cents a gallon. If this trade can be supplied the creamery can get from $1 to 1.50 a can compared to 10 cents in the old way.

SOMETHING FOR THE PACKER.

The Manufacturers' Record has the following words of commendation for that much abused class of people, the packers:

"The packer, with his modern methods, has been of great economic benefit to the country, has provided every day cash markets for all grades of stock, making stock farming as steady as any other business; has developed the system of transporting and distributing the perishable meat products of the over-produced west to the ever-consuming east and south. The packer has equalized to freight differences the cost of living east with west, southeast with southwest, has enabled the manufacturing, mining and specialized agricultural sections to go about their particular work without detailing needed labor to food production tasks. The packer was early forced to develop foreign trade outlets and his product is found wherever commerce's flag flies; he developed by-product utilization before other industries thought of it, and gave its benefits to the people; has done a huge perishable product business at a smaller per cent. of profit than any other large industry, and yet he is not popular and his friends are not labeled."

VALUE OF A FOOD COMMISSION.

Some time ago the Wisconsin Dairy and Food Commission sent out an inquiry to wholesale dealers in cheese all over the country, asking them to state frankly and conservatively the minimum amount that had been added to Wisconsin cheese through the efforts of the commission to enforce the laws and in other ways to promote the market quality of the cheese product of the state. In an address before the Wisconsin Cheesemakers' Association, delivered by Dairy and Food Commissioner Emery, he stated that the average of all replies was that the increase had been one cent a pound. In 1909 there was produced in the state 145,171,235 pounds of cheese and an increase in value of one cent a pound would amount to $1,451,000.

This sum represents the worth and value to the state of a code of sound dairy laws and a live dairy and food commissioner on the single matter of cheese alone, remarks Hoard's Dairyman. What the value of the commission is in dollars and cents in all other details of the dairy industry, as well as the efficient protection of the people of the state it is very difficult to estimate, but we do not believe it falls short of the value given in the foregoing very impressive figures.

NEW QUEEN OF THE DAIRY WORLD.

With a record of 1,058.34 pounds of butterfat produced in 365 days, Banostine Belle De Kol, a five-year-old Holstein Friesian cow, owned by Dimmick & Bro., East Claridon, Ohio, becomes the new queen of the dairy world. This wonderful cow produced during the year over 27,000 pounds of milk, testing 3.86 per cent. fat. This means over nine gallons of milk per day, or enough to supply thirty-six families each with a quart of milk a day. If made into butter her fat production would be 1,322.925 pounds of butter or over three and a half pounds a day for 365 days. This was all the more remarkable because it was made without her being dry at all before freshening. No other cow in the world has ever exceeded Banostine's milk record. The cow is a strong, vigorous one and will weigh 1,600 pounds. During the time that Banostine was in test she received nearly if not all the time more or less ensilage and alfalfa. When available she received roots and a mixed grain ration, the foundation of which was oats. The heavier feeds were varied frequently according to the condition of the cow, and that which seemed best at one time did not seem best at other times. The average amount of grain fed was between twelve and fourteen pounds daily. Her record was made after the birth of her third calf. The tests were made under the careful supervision of the Dairy Department of the Ohio State University.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

According to reports from various sections of the country, if they are reliable, there is a shortage of more than a million head of beef cattle in the United States. This shortage is shown by receipts and statistics compiled at the big cattle markets of America—Kansas City, St. Joseph, Sioux City, Denver and Chicago—for 1912, as compared with May last year. It is due to the breaking up of the great cattle ranches in the western states and the failure of the land owners to raise cattle on small tracts, in the opinion of an expert on the question. According to this authority there is little exportation of American cattle to-day whereas a few years ago large shipments were made to England and Europe. This trade has been seized by South America and Australia.

That a municipality has a right to pass an ordinance requiring trading stamp concerns to take out a license is the effect of a ruling of the supreme court of the state of Washington in sustaining an ordinance passed by the city of Tacoma. Tacoma requires such enterprises to pay a license of $100. The decision was handed down recently.

New York Times:—Some startling figures as to the appetite of this city came out recently at a hearing of the Marketing Committee of the State Food Investigation Committee. It appeared that each year New York consumed 1,440,000,000 eggs, and that before now there have been put away in the cold storage warehouses of the city no fewer than 319,800,000 eggs. Each week the inhabitants of this city eat over 1,350,000 pounds of butter, and in the course of a year manage to do away with 72,000,000 pounds. Last year the marketing for cheese was considered to be unusually poor, but in spite of that fact the amount consumed in the city was 30,000,000 pounds.

Among the new inventions that mark the progress of the dairy industry is the new idea shown in the 50-pound butter box which has recently been put on the market. They are made the regular size and shape as the wooden boxes that hold fifty prints but do not have to be nailed together as do the wooden boxes. They come knocked down, take up little room, are light and easily handled yet are strong.

The United States Department of Agriculture has recently issued a bulletin on "The Pasteurization of Milk," which takes up the subject quite extensively. The information contained in the bulletin should prove useful to every creameryman and dairyman. The bulletin—Circular 184—can be had by sending to the Bureau of Animal Industry, Washington, D. C.

Last year Mexico shipped into the United States coffee to the value of more than $3,000,000, this despite the unsettled conditions in the country. It is claimed that the industry in Mexico is destined to grow rapidly. The Central American states shipped to this country a like amount. This is less than 10 per cent. of all coffee shipped into this country from all sources, but these west coast coffees are growing in popularity in the United States and the shipments are destined to materially increase. Germany for many years has been willing to pay more than this country.

A land company in California is preparing 1,000 acres of land is to be planted to rice. The rice will be ripe and ready for harvest the latter part of the fall. The fact that 1,000 acres in one tract is to be sown to rice, remarks the San Francisco Grocer and Country Merchant, indicates the extent to which the rice industry is being developed. The industry is past its experimental stage and its commercial cultivation is now assured.

A writer in an exchange, on the cost and profit of a herd of cows, says he has never before considered the manure a cow makes as a source of income. If the cows were kept and the manure sold for cash, what would that be? If there were no manure used on the farm it would decrease all the more in productiveness and commercial fertilizers would have to be purchased, else the farm would run down. That would mean more expense and less profit. Certainly the manure is a part of the cow's earnings.

The Minnesota State Dairyman's Association is offering prizes this year to the boys and girls under 18 years of age who can keep the best records of the dairy herds at home. Records must show the amount of milk and butterfat, the cost of feed and the net returns from each cow. Each contestant must keep records on at least six cows for six months. Fifty dollars in cash prizes will be awarded for the best records. The purpose of the association in offering these prizes is to interest the boys and girls in the dairy industry and to bring about improvement in the dairy herds.

South Dakota for the year ending June 30, 1911, manufactured 8,227,779 pounds of butter valued at $1,850,132. Besides this amount of butter made within the borders of the state 5,467,054 pounds were made from cream shipped out of the state. This is valued at $1,192,190. The amount of butter made on the farms is given as 4,880,000 pounds valued at $976,007. In addition to her butter 200,000 pounds of butterfat were made into ice cream, which was worth $70,000. Then the amount of milk and cream consumed totaled 5,000,000 pounds valued at $1,250,000. The value of skim milk and other by-products is placed at over a million dollars. These figures added up show that the state's dairy products had a total value of $6,338,329.

Ohio game wardens claim that 25 per cent. of the quail and 40 per cent. of the song birds froze to death or starved owing to the excessively cold weather of last winter.

State food inspectors in Arkansas recently arrested a peddler named McMullin who was selling butter containing 59.68 per cent. water. According to the inspectors McMullin would take one pound of butter and the same amount of hot water and make two pounds of butter, which tested 59.68 per cent. moisture. It is claimed in that section of the country that some of those engaged in the manufacture of butter illegally in this manner use machines made for that purpose. The inspectors stated, however, that McMullin said he had no machine and none could be found among his belongings.

Following a rigid inspection the State Department of Health of New York says that thousands of pounds of butter, poultry and fish, much of which had been in cold storage from eighteen months to two years, and even longer, have been placed on the market. Government inspectors seized 30,000 pounds of butter in New York city which they said was unfit for food.

The State Department of Health of New York has begun an inspection of all retail places in the state which handle cold storage goods and expects to "undertake prosecutions where cold storage goods are sold as fresh goods." Under a recent order these retailers must label cold storage goods with letters ten inches high.

In India butter is treated so that it never becomes stale and may be kept for a hundred years says an exchange. The butter is boiled until all the water and curds are got rid of and nothing remains but clear oil. When the oil cools into a solid it is granulated and in this form will remain fresh indefinitely. This is what they call ghee, and ghee is nothing more or less than dried butter.

The Farm Managing Department of Columbia, Mo., has originated a new idea to help the farmers and also to give the experts something to do. It is making arrangements for sending a limited number of experts out in different parts of the state, wherever the farmers show sufficient interest to be advisors on all matters pertaining to farming. They are to help any farmers who need help, with suggestions for their work on the farms. The state is to stand one-fourth of the expense and the farmers the remainder.

The wholesale price of butter, eggs and cheese in Canada during the past winter was higher than in any year since 1890. Wholesale houses state that the prices are now (April) higher than in any previous April for the past twenty-three years. The lowest wholesale price of fresh eggs in any April since 1890 was seven cents per dozen in 1897. Last year they were twenty and twenty-one cents per dozen, and this year twenty-five cents. Butter sold at its lowest wholesale April figure also in 1897, the price being nineteen to twenty-one cents for creamery prints. It was up to thirty to thirty-two cents in 1908, then receded, and then climbed back last year and is now thirty-five to thirty-eight cents per pound. Cheese, wholesale variety, has risen from ten and a half cents in 1890 to sixteen cents in the present month.

A bill has been introduced in Congress by Representative Smith of Texas, providing that no milk, butter or cheese shall be transported in interstate or foreign commerce unless "the same has been examined, inspected, found to be sound, healthful, wholesome, and fit for human food, and labeled, marked, stamped, or tagged as inspected and passed by an inspector of the Department of Agriculture." Violation of the proposed law it is provided shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Experiments carried on by the government go to show that fishy flavor in butter most often comes from high acid cream during the warm season of the year. This is only another argument in favor of good raw material. Good raw material will never come in the summertime, however, by the once or twice a week delivery system.

The report of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, shows that despite the many actions brought against the shippers of egg products unfit for food purposes by reason of filthiness, putridity or decomposition, traffic in such inferior articles of food did not seem to abate as a resume of the inspection work shows that a far greater number of samples of such eggs were collected and more seizures made during this period than in the previous year.

While the dairymen of the country are talking about the best way of meeting the oleo situation that industry is making rapid strides forward. And it will continue to do so until the creamerymen and dairymen of the country get together.

While fifty per cent. of the patrons of the factory continue to care for their milk in a careless way, it is difficult for the instructors or cheesemakers to bring about an improvement. Even where nearly all of the patrons take good care of their milk, the milk of one careless patron will injure the quality of the milk of all the rest, remarks a well known dairy instructor.

According to the reports of the Internal Revenue Office in Chicago the production of oleomargarine in that district during the month of March was 6,725,011 pounds—6,495,960 pounds of uncolored on which $\frac{1}{4}$ c. tax was paid, and 229,051 pounds of colored which carried a tax of 10 cents. In February the output was 7,892,659 pounds, which indicates a falling of for March of 1,167,684 pounds.

Experiments have fully demonstrated that stale and putrid water will impart undesirable flavor and odors to milk when drunk by the cow. Some alkali wells contain water which is not only rich in soluble minerals, but which is also brackish and almost putrid in taste and smell. When such water is drunk by the dairy cow, her milk will not be clean of flavor or smell. This undesirable quality of milk can not be laid to the alkali or minerals in the water, but rather to the decayed organic matter so common in alkali water. In the semi-arid regions, especially in the newly settled portions shallow wells are common and the water from such wells contain too much organic matter.

Danish butter is the only kind of butter that is imported into Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. Its reputation has spread as far as the world goes. Last year Denmark exported $60,000,000 worth of butter, $20,000,000 worth of bacon and $10,000,000 worth of eggs. At the same time the nation sustained itself with the same kind of products and other outputs of the farm.

About one and a half billion pounds of milk were used by the creameries, cheese factories and ice cream plants of Indiana last year. A very conservative estimate places the butter made from this milk at about 68,000,000 pounds, figuring that every hundred pounds of milk produces about 4.5 pounds of butter. The average market price of butter during the year was 29.75 cents or $20,000,000 for milk and cream converted into butter.

Quite often the flavor of butter is spoiled on account of the condition of the churn, it not being clean and sweet. This is especially true when a churn is used only once or twice a week as is often the case on the farm. Flavor is the quality which gives butter its value over other fats. A little carelessness in regard to keeping the churn clean and in a sweet condition will often spoil this desirable flavor in butter.

The Sixteenth Annual Convention of the Association of State and National Food and Dairy Departments was opened at 10 A. M., Tuesday, July 9th, in the Science Building of the University of Washington, Seattle, Wash.

President Brown introduced Hon. George F. Cotterill, Mayor of Seattle, who extended the courtesies of the city and spoke appreciatively of the Association's work, and of the value of the services rendered to his State by Hon. L. Davies, the Food Commissioner of the State. In the absence of His Excellency, the Governor of Washington, Dr. Thomas F. Kane, President of the University of Washington, welcomed the Association on behalf of the State and the University, alluded to the many public relations of the modern state university, and dwelt with especial emphasis upon the importance of the pure food movement and of the related movement looking to the maintenance of the national food supply.

By request, Hon. R. M. Allen, of Kentucky, responded on behalf of the Association.

The annual address delivered by Hon. Lucius P. Brown, Dairy and Food Commissioner of Tennessee, the President of the Association, presented a most interesting and valuable summary of the recent progress of the pure food, drug and sanitary legislation in America, and an instructive comparison of the State and National expenditures for the enforcement of these laws, the number of samples examined and sanitary inspection made (a masterly production representing a laborious gathering of data).

The consideration of the draft of the revised constitution was postponed until the last day of the convention to afford opportunity for committee consideration of various proposed amendments to the committee's draft.

The remainder of the first session was devoted to the reception of reports of standing committees.

The Committee on Co-operation reported, through its Chairman, Dr. S. J. Crumbine, of Kansas, the arrangement for exchange of confidential reports of findings between the national and state food controls, and noted that the state controls had been somewhat slow in getting the system into operation.

The Committee on Cold Storage, Hon. H. E. Barnard, of Indiana, Dr. R. B. FitzRandolph, of New Jersey, Dr. Mary E. Pennington, of the U. S. Bureau of Chemistry, Dr. M. E. Jaffa, of California, and Hon. W. B. Barney, of Iowa, presented an admirable report stating that after careful consideration of the various cold storage laws, proposed and enacted, of the report of the U. S. Senate Committee hearings, of the various scientific investigations upon the subject, and after extensive correspondence with those engaged in the cold storage business, had drafted a cold storage bill which expressed the judgment of the committee on the subject. Upon motion, it was ordered that the draft be printed to enable the members to study carefully its provisions, and that its consideration be made a special order for a later session of the convention.

The Committee on Methods of Bacteriology presented a brief report of progress and, upon motion of James Foust, of Pennsylvania, was continued.

In accordance with instructions given at the last convention, that times be set apart for the meetings of affiliated associations, the program provided for afternoon meetings of the organizations of food executives, food chemists, dairy officials, and of the legal counsel to food and drug controls. The amount of business transacted by these organizations required, however, a resort to evening sessions for the completion of their programs. The transactions of the food executives and food analysts will be presented in later paragraphs.

At the Wednesday morning program of the Association, His Excellency, Governor M. E. Hay, welcomed the members on behalf of the State of Washington, and in an admirable address touched upon the nobility of the cause represented by the organization, of the need for its service in securing for the people pure food and square dealing, and in curbing the rapacity of business greed; and expressed his judgment of such concerted efforts as this organization was established to secure, even at the cost of much time and travel.

The reports of the Secretary, Hon. W. M. Allen, of North Carolina, and of the Treasurer, Hon. James Foust, of Pennsylvania, were then presented.

The Honorable A. H. Jones, of Illinois, presented an able paper upon "The Object of the Association as defined by the New Constitution," in which he urged particularly the importance of securing uniformity in the food and drug legislation of the national and State governments, so far at least as essential principles are concerned, though he recognized that uniformity in detail is scarcely practicable.

Dr. M. E. Jaffa, of California, developed the subject, "Under what Department of the State Government can Food and Drug Laws be most Effectively Enforced?" He described the system adopted in California as related to the object to be accomplished, but stated that the conditions and divisions of executive duty in the several states differ so greatly that a departmental relation of the food and drug control work brought for one, might prove altogether unfitted for the most efficient working of the control in other Commonwealths. The discussion was continued by the Hon. J. Q. Emery, of Wisconsin, who dwelt especially upon the object to be secured by these controls.

"Publicity for the Work of Food Inspection and the Best Methods of Obtaining It," was ably discussed by Commissioner E. F. Ladd, of North Dakota. He urged the especial value of the public press as a publicity agent, and stated that the North Dakota law provided for the paid publication of the findings in food cases; in like manner with other official notices—a provision he had found very helpful.

The Thursday program continued the discussion of subjects of live importance in every state. Dr. A. N. Cook, Food and Drug Commissioner of South Dakota, read a paper on "The Necessity for Drug Control and the Best Means of Enforcing Pure Drug Laws." He set forth the evils discovered in the drug trade in his own State, and related the methods there used to secure an abatement of the evil. A highly profitable discussion followed.

Dr. William P. Cutler, State Food Commissioner of Missouri, read a paper entitled "The Necessity for Co-operation Between State and Municipal Food Controls," in which the large police powers conferred by law upon municipal authorities was noted, the fact stated that the highest efficiency of public service could be secured only by the joint effort of state and municipal authorities, and some of the methods described by which such co-operation had been secured in Missouri.

"Should Laws Governing Food Sanitation be Enforced Through Food and Drug Control, or Through Other Agencies?" was ably discussed by State Food and Drug Commissioner Barnard, of Indiana, who described the manner in which sanitary laws were enforced in Indiana under the direction of the State Board of Health, which is also charged with the enforcement of the food and drug laws. Hon. L. Davies, Food Commissioner of Washington, followed with a relation of the enforcement of sanitary laws under his direction.

The Association having accepted, for Friday, an invitation to witness the operation of salmon canning, an evening session was held on Thursday in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce. At that session, the revision of the constitution was the first order of business. After much discussion the committee's draft was adopted with considerable amendment. The two major changes are those providing for the creation of two sections to deal respectively with purely scientific and purely executive questions, leaving for the main program the treatment of questions affecting the general policy of food, drugs and sanitary control and other matters likewise of interest to all control officials; and, second, the limitation of voting power to the executive officers of the several controls with a corresponding limitation of the power of the section to deal formally with matters affecting general policy. The title of the organization was changed to "The American Association of Food, Dairy and Drug Officials."

The draft of a cold storage bill prepared by the standing committee upon that subject was earnestly discussed and referred back to the committee for revision at several points, with instruction that the revision determined by the committee should be furnished to the members of the Association on or before December 1, 1912, in view of the sitting of many state legislatures shortly thereafter.

Upon motion of Dr. Bryan, of Illinois, a vote of thanks was tendered to President Brown and the other officers of the Association for their efficient conduct of their official duties.

The report of the committee on credentials having been presented by the Chairman, Commissioner J. Q. Emery, of Wisconsin, and accepted by vote of the Association, the annual election of officers was held. The officers elected are:

President, Hon. L. Davies, of Washington.

First Vice-President, Hon. Willard Hansen, of Utah.

Second Vice-President, Hon. W. B. Barney, of Iowa.

Third Vice-President, Hon. Neils P. Hansen, of Nebraska.

Secretary, Hon. W. M. Allen, North Carolina.

Treasurer, Hon. H. F. Potter, of Connecticut.

Additional members of Executive Committee:

Three year term, Hon. Wm. P. Cutler, of Missouri.

Two year term, Dr. H. E. Barnard, of Indiana.

One year term, Hon. James H. Wallis, of Idaho.

The last item of business was the report of the Committee on Resolutions. As adopted by the Association, these resolutions are:

Resolved, That the members of the American Association of Food, Drug and Sanitary Officials, express to the Honorable George F. Cotterill, Mayor of this beautiful city of congenial climate and picturesque surroundings, to Honorable D. Davies, State Dairy and Food Commissioner, the University of Washington, the Chamber of Commerce and to others who have joined in making our stay pleasant, our hearty thanks for their cordial hospitality.

Resolved, That this Association express to Governor M. E. Hay and President Thomas F. Kane, its appreciation of their sympathetic and inspiring addresses, relative to the important work in which we are engaged.

Resolved, That this Association expresses to the Committee on Cooperation its hearty thanks for its efficient work, and urges the further development of its comprehensive plan for practical co-operation between the states and the federal government, in the enforcement of food laws.

Whereas, The National Food and Drugs Act, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, does not apply to false and exaggerated claims for efficacy of patent medicines, and,

Whereas, The usefulness of that law is thereby greatly restricted,

Be it Resolved, That this Association heartily endorses the message of the President of the United States, recommending the amendment of the law so as to prevent the interstate shipment of medicines which are falsely labeled as to their curative effect, and urges upon Congress the necessity for the early enactment of remedial legislation.

Resolved, That this Association favors the amendment of the National Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906, to compel the branding of the weight or measure upon all packages of food, and that we hereby re-affirm the resolutions adopted by this Association in annual meeting at New Orleans and at Duluth, favoring compulsory weight or measure branding.

Resolved, That this Association expresses its judgment that there is need for such amendment of the present National oleomargarine law as shall strengthen it at points where it has been found defective, and hereby approves the type of legislation set forth in the bill drafted by the National Dairy Union, to the end that consumers may be protected from deception and honest producers from unfair competition.

This Association, realizing the need of an improved agriculture that will meet the conditions of an ever-increasing food consumption, urgently recommends the enactment of such legislation as will promote the improvement of agricultural methods, and tend to the conservation of the land's fertility.

Whereas, There are now being extensively introduced upon the market various products composed of skim-milk intimately mixed with added cream, butter or butterfat, or other fats,

Whereas, These products are offered instead of normal milk and cream, both for direct consumption and for use as raw materials in the manufacture of so-called ice cream and other food articles usually made directly from milk and cream,

Resolved, That it is the judgment of this Association that these modifications of and substitutes for milk and cream, and also the food articles for whose preparation they are employed instead of normal milk or cream, are not properly saleable under the commercial names of the corresponding normal food articles, but should bear designations clearly distinguishing them from said normal articles.

Recognizing the extent of the fraud in the manufacture and sale of adulterated linseed oil, this Association urges the enactment by the several states of uniform laws regulating the manufacture and sale of linseed oil, and further urges on the Congress of the United States the adoption of a law which will effectively regulate the shipment of adulterated linseed oil in interstate commerce, to the end that the consuming public and reputable manufacturers of linseed oil may be properly protected.

Whereas, Meat inspection is one of the most important phases of pure food work, and the experience of all nations has shown the need for protecting the people from the danger of contaminated, spoiled and diseased meat.

Resolved, That the National Congress be requested to appropriate the funds necessary to carry the blessings of the National Meat Inspection Act into the widest effect, and that all states and cities be urged to provide a complete system of sanitary and disease inspection for all meats exempt from Federal jurisdiction.

Recognizing the danger of the spread of disease by the medium of the food supply, and appreciating the fact that the passage of well designed sanitary laws has furnished adequate means by which to eliminate persons suffering from syphilis, gonorrhea, consumption, and other contagious diseases from the ranks of food handlers, this Association urges the rigid enforcement of such legislation, and the development of a practice of physical inspection that will insure sound, healthy workers with the food supply.

We affirm our adherence to the basic principle that the burden of proof of the harmlessness of substances used in foods should rest with the manufacturer.

Whereas, This Association recognizes that the full effect of its service to the people can be secured only by such dissemination of information as shall enable them most effectively to protect themselves; and, recognizing, further, that the public press is the most wide-reaching agency for the purpose, be it, therefore,

Resolved, That this Association hereby expresses to the public press of America its appreciation of the valuable aid rendered in the past, and bespeaks for the future its efficient co-operation.

MEETING OF SECTION A.

Section of Food Executives.

After the annual address by President James Foust, which is printed herewith, other papers were presented and are printed in full.

ANNUAL ADDRESS OF JAMES FOUST, PRESIDENT OF THE ASSOCIATION OF STATE FOOD AND DAIRY EXECUTIVES.

Members of the Association of State Food and Dairy Executives:

In opening this third meeting of our Association, it is not needful that I occupy your time with any elaborate address upon the general work of this Association, nor is it my purpose to bring to your attention, at this time, any special topic for your consideration. It may, however, be appropriate to dwell very briefly upon the importance and distinctive character of the subjects for whose discussion we have come together.

Food and drug control executives are charged with very grave duties in protecting the consumers' health from injury through the very substances upon which they depend for the upbuilding and repair of their bodies and for their defense against the attacks of disease, and the consumers' pocket-books from numerous thefts that are individually small, but, taken together, add up into very large amounts.

The general food laws have imposed upon us the duty of exercising very delicate judgments. I say 'delicate' not only because of the great variety of the subjects with which we must deal, but especially because of the close supervision we are required to keep over the details of manufacture and sale of foods and drugs. Our people, accustomed to great freedom of action and always impatient of governmental interference with private affairs, find it hard to realize that the food and drug manufacturers are not engaged in purely private work, but are, in fact, performing distinctly public service.

Our problem is, to keep in touch with what they are doing, to help them to realize their responsibilities to the public, to restrain them from acts contrary to the laws we are sworn to enforce, and to do so in the manner, and at the same time most effective and least obnoxious, avoiding as far as practicable, such kinds of interference as tend to unduly hamper and discourage the trade in the performance of its proper and important service to the public.

In our work, new problems are constantly arising. Some of these problems belong to our experts, our chemists, microscopists, drug experts, and legal advisers; some are so broad in their relations that they can best be discussed by all branches of the service in common; but there are many that are purely executive, for whose solution we alone are responsible. Such problems are those of making a small force most efficient in service, securing the largest good with the least cost to the State, guiding the educational, as well as the police divisions of our work, keeping the interest and confidence of the public we serve, securing the cordial co-operation of the fair-minded men in the producing and selling business, making our control effective with the least interference with legitimate trade activities.

The program arranged for this meeting includes topics from whose full and free discussion I am sure we all may profit, and we shall, I trust, carry back to our work many helpful suggestions from their consideration.

SHOULD AN EXECUTIVE OFFICER HAVE THE RIGHT UNDER STATE FOOD LAWS TO INSTITUTE EXECUTIVE HEARINGS TO DISPOSE OF CASES OF VIOLATION WITHOUT REFERENCE TO THE COURTS.

Dr. Charles D. Woods.
Director Maine Agricultural Experiment Station.

I am sure that there is substantial agreement among all people that the chief object to be aimed at in all food legislation and its execution is the protection of the public, and as a corollary that this should be accompanied by as little disturbance to trade as is consistent with full protection to the public. I also think that with the exception of possibly some food executives themselves the proposition is equally clear that the convenience of the executive is not to be considered in any way in the execution of the law. Viewed from the standpoint of the executive alone the strictly police law that has been adopted in quite a number of states is without question the easiest and safest for the executive. In those states whenever a violation of the law is found the executive merely considers whether he has or has not sufficient evidence to make a conviction. If he has evidence to make a conviction the case is brought into court; if he thinks he has not the evidence the case is dropped. If he has sufficient evidence it may happen that a person who is technically guilty and is morally innocent of any wrong doing is given a criminal record in court and a very unfavorable notoriety in his own locality. The cleverer man, who may be a rascal, but has conducted his adulteration and misbranding in such a way that he is technically outside of the law, or in such a way that the executive can not obtain court evidence, may go free without any publicity as to his mistake or wrong doings.

In the National law, primarily for the purpose of protecting the dealer from undue notoriety, the Secretary of Agriculture, whenever the Bureau of Chemistry reports a violation of the Food and Drugs Act to him, is directed to give a notice of the findings to the suspected person. The person so notified is given an opportunity to be heard in his defense. This principle has been enacted into most of the State laws that are at all analogous to the National law and read something like this: "When the executive officer of the law becomes cognizant of the violations of the provisions of this act he shall cause notice of such fact, together with a copy of the findings, to be given to the person from whom the sample was obtained and the person whose name appears upon the label. The person so notified shall be given an opportunity to be heard under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by said executive officer. Notices shall specify the date, hour and place of the hearing."

A provision analogous to this has been in force in Maine for seven years. The few thoughts that I have to bring at this time are based upon my experience as executive officer of the law under this proviso. Whenever there is apparently a violation of the Maine Food Law, whether this is shown by laboratory analysis, by the report of the inspector, or in whatsoever manner the information may reach me, I appoint, under this section of the law, a hearing. In the notice of the hearing which is sent to all of the parties interested all of the essential points of the evidence in my possession are given. This is accompanied by the statement: "As directed by the law I hereby give you an opportunity to present evidence before me on (naming day and hour). The hearing will be private and will be held in (place of holding the hearing is stated). Its object is to give you an opportunity to establish your innocence. You can appear in person or by attorney. If you prefer you need not appear and may present the testimony by letter any time before the date named above. In case you do not care to present any testimony I shall proceed to determine the manner upon the evidence now before me."

These hearings are private. The matter is given no publicity whatever. It is a matter resting entirely between the executive of the law and the parties concerned. Hence the executive does not have to consider whether he has or has not evidence for conviction. Whenever the law is seemingly violated the hearing is appointed and the parties concerned are told what the trouble is and are given a full opportunity for explanation. This brings it about that many trivial violations of the law, which one would not feel justified in going to court with, and which a judge would be quite likely to throw out as being irrelevant or trivial, can be taken up at a private hearing and brought officially to the attention of the parties concerned. In my experience, in more than 99 cases out of 100 such trivial violations are thus corrected. Speaking out of an experience of many hundreds of hearings, I have never had any hearing at which there was any fault found by the parties accused because attention was brought in this way to their violations of the law. And I have never found myself in any way impeded in the prosecution if the case seemed to be such that would require prosecution for the protection of the public.

While this provision of the National law was first introduced not for the protection of the public but for the safety of the dealer and manufacturer, I am convinced as the result of my experience that no greater safeguarding of the interest of the public is anywhere to be found in the administration of the law than is given under this proviso which allows for private hearings to be held before the executive, I feel very confident that every executive who has the hearing proviso in his law will agree that it is a most wise provision both from the standpoint of the honest manufacturer, the dealer and the consuming public.

There seems to be another phase involved in the topic which is assigned to me, and that is a disposition of cases of violation without reference to the court.

So far as I know no law which has the hearing proviso in it contemplates the disposition of cases of violations without reference to the courts. The hearings are appointed to give the accused an opportunity to establish his innocence. If he fails to establish his innocence it is still the duty of the executive to institute proceedings in the proper courts, either directly or through the law department of the state. In the great majority of instances executives use more or less of discretion as to whether they do or do not bring a prosecution. Even in the states in which it is the rule that prosecutions should be brought there are doubtless occasions when the public service is better cared for without prosecution than with prosecution, particularly is this true in the case of technical violations of the law.

In the execution of the Maine Food Law the writer has exercised a large amount of discretion relative to prosecution, and has attempted to enforce the law more along educational than punitive lines. He may exercise discretion in the matter of prosecutions, but has no discretion relative to publicity. Consequently the violations of the law which are found are published irrespective of whether prosecutions follow or not. It has been the policy in the enforcement of the law to take up matters no faster than they could be thoroughly investigated. Whenever a new subject has been taken up the lines have been drawn far less rigid than after one or two years. That is, in the enforcement of the law attempt has been constantly made to make the requirements higher and higher. Matters which were tolerated when investigations were first begun would be quickly followed by prosecutions later. After dealers and manufacturers have been thoroughly informed on a certain line of goods they are no longer dealt with leniently whether the violations arise from criminal intent or from carelessness or indifference. More or less similar discretion has doubtless been exercised by each executive present. But to make the executive of the law both judge and jury would be a dangerous proceeding, particularly in the states in which the executive is a political officer, either directly elected or appointed by a political party. It might be less dangerous in the few states in which the executive is appointed by a non-political board, as the trustees of the state university, or the State Board of Health, provided they are entirely out of politics.

To sum up, the writer believes that under the State food laws the executive should have the right to institute executive hearings, both for the protection of the public and for the protection of the manufacturer and the dealer. It is doubtful if he should have definite authority given him to dispose of cases of violation without reference to the courts, as that would place altogether too much arbitrary power in the hands of one person.

IN STATES HAVING NO CENTRAL LABORATORY IS IT MORE ADVANTAGEOUS TO EMPLOY THE ANALYSTS UPON A FIXED SALARY OR AT A STATED PRICE PER SAMPLE ANALYZED.

H. E. Barnard.

Before consenting to prepare a paper on this subject I advised your chairman that my deposition would necessarily be one-sided because of the fact that the departments with which I have been connected, both in New Hampshire and Indiana, have maintained a central laboratory, and I have therefore had no experience in the employment of outside analysts, either upon a fixed salary or at a stated price per sample analyzed. What I have to say will therefore portray the advantages of a central laboratory rather than the disadvantages which may arise under another method of operation. In at least half the states the laboratories are operated in part as research laboratories. This is the case in all laboratories connected with State Experiment Stations, and is or ought to be equally true of laboratories doing public health work. In State Experiment Laboratories it is impossible definitely to determine the cost of single analyses because of the fact that much time is given to the investigation of problems, the value of which cannot be determined in dollars and cents. In our laboratory for instance, our chemists have made a critical study of the bacterial contamination of food, of the deterioration of standard pharmaceuticals, and of the most suitable methods to be employed in the manufacture of sugar syrups, and for an entire summer we operated a soda fountain for the purpose of studying the keeping qualities of crushed fruits. All such work is directly connected with the enforcement of food and drug laws, and yet the analyses required were not of the type usually carried into court in the prosecution of cases for violation of law. Where a department is operated solely for the purpose of enforcing statutory requirements and where no attempt is made to assist manufacturers, or co-operate with dealers, the hired analyst may be able to furnish the routine work essential to determining whether or not the butter fat content of milk is satisfactory, whether a given sample is oleomargarine or butter, whether a vinegar meets the legal standard or is deficient in some factor, whether a preservative has been used and how much, and all of the hundreds of tests which are necessary to determine the composition of the various articles which are collected by inspectors and sent to headquarters.

When our laboratories were first opened and before our pure food law was enacted, it seemed advisable for us to know somewhat definitely the exact condition of the food and drug market of the State. For that purpose we collected a large number of samples of great variety in every part of the State. These samples were sent into the laboratory and analyzed by our chemists who for more than a year gave their entire time to this work which was of the most routine character. The expense of maintaining a laboratory during this time, including salaries of chemists, clerk and janitor, bills for chemicals and apparatus to replace breakage, was $.8824 per sample. The total number of food and drug samples analyzed during this time was 5,200. The work of the clerk was in considerable part devoted to sending out information in answer to inquiries that had nothing to do with the analytical investigations. Included in the list of articles analyzed was such things as wines, whisky, vinegars, maple syrup, preserves, flavoring extracts and syrups which cannot be analyzed except at the expense of considerable labor. Less than ten per cent. of the samples examined were milks. The work was well done and the results obtained were most valuable to us, while the expense was, I am confident, less than one-fifth what it would have been had the work been turned over to commercial chemists and far less than it would have been if it had been done by contracts. In the six years since these figures were compiled, we have never again approached them. At the present time it is probably costing the State more for its analytical work than if the samples sent in were turned over to some commercial laboratory, but it must be remembered that we hold the routine work of our chemists, that is, the analyses of samples sent in by inspectors, to be by far the least valuable work of our laboratories. I should not wish to say to a young man who was thinking of joining our force that we could offer him only an opportunity to grind out analyses of various food samples, and that we should utilize his results only for the purpose of convicting an offender who had violated the law by diluting his vinegar or misbranding his jam. What we want of our chemists is the ability to do real, constructive, research work. We wish them to determine whether or not a given patent preparation will perform the wonderful cures enumerated upon the label. We wish them to be competent to carry forward such physiological experiments as may be necessary to determine the effect of a food preservative. We wish them to develop new analytical methods which will assist the analyst in detecting fraud. We wish them to take their place in the scientific societies and to turn out work for scientific publications which will be a credit to themselves and as well to the department.

But I am wandering very far from the subject assigned me and have argued for a central laboratory rather than to the point at issue.

If a department has no central laboratory and wishes only to determine the composition of food stuffs in so far as it may agree with fixed standards, I believe the most suitable method is to contract out the work required at a fixed price per sample. This price should vary according to the amount of work required. A milk analysis for instance, should not be done at the same price as a vinegar analysis. As a chemist, I should deplore any attempt to reduce the price of such contract work to such a point that it would naturally go to men who have no right to be called chemists. Unfortunately almost every town shelters some partially trained men, possibly some laboratory assistant who calls himself a chemist and who is willing to undertake chemical work at a ridiculous figure. In other words there are as many grades of chemists as there are physicians and attorneys. The State employs the best attorneys at command and pay them an adequate fee for their services. I do not favor the employment of an analyst at a fixed salary where only routine work is to be done unless it is apparent that sufficient number of samples will be collected to offer him constant employment and if such is the case a central laboratory should immediately be organized. In my case for instance, I find the number of samples sent in by inspectors constantly diminishing, and yet we are constantly enlarging our chemical force. We have however, as I have indicated above, many opportunities for chemical services and all of our men are constantly occupied.

In summarizing my remarks I shall put them in this form. If a State has no central laboratory in close touch with the head of the department it ought to have one. If the present laws do not authorize such an establishment, amend the laws. If they make no provision for other than routine work extend the province of the department, by legislation if necessary, until the laboratory is something more than a wheel of the machine which carries the defendant and his illegal samples through the courts. Food commissioners must be more than clerks, executives in office chairs. They are vested with functions that call for trained skillful services and if their work is to be constructive instead of mere routine salary drawing political rewards, they must be surrounded by something besides filing cases for briefs, score cards and report blanks.

SHOULD FOOD OFFICIALS PASS UPON THE LEGAL SUFFICIENCY OF LABELS FOR THE INFORMATION OF THE MANUFACTURER OR DEALER?

By Hon. E. F. Ladd, of North Dakota.

The question as to whether we shall pass upon the correctness or sufficiency of labeling, or exaggerated statements which are made upon the label, and thus give the information to the manufacturer, is one of the questions that has puzzled more than one food official. There are many points for consideration in a question of this kind. There are manufacturers who are honestly seeking advice which might properly be given by a food executive, and there are manufacturers who are seeking to gain a trade advantage over some competitor and not placing the true information before the Commissioner or executive from whom he seeks information. True, there is the law or statute itself and lawyers and courts can interpret the act for all clients, but even then it is a question whether the true interpretation for an individual case can be given by one not wholly familiar with all phases of the law and its workings as is the Commissioner himself. Personally, I will present my own views with regard to this matter, and will not attempt to speak for others who may look upon the question from a different stand-point and yet are as fully justified in their stand as is the writer.

I have chosen to pass upon labels for the benefit of the manufacturer, believing that by so doing I am serving the greatest number of people honestly seeking for advice, and where there are those who abuse the privilege they are soon exposed by this department before the public for the course which they have taken. Having passed upon a label and found the same in compliance with our law for a product which is appropriate under this particular label, I do not hesitate to condemn the same label when I find that a manufacturer has misused the same.

Assuming that ninety per cent. of the manufacturers are intentionally honest in their endeavors to comply with the law; that five per cent. are incompetent; and another five per cent. are downright crooks; that a much less number than ninety per cent. are by circumstances forced to adopt questionable methods; I believe that by aiding the manufacturer we may bring the list of those who will comply with the law to its maximum and weed out those who are downright crooks.

At times labels show omissions that should be supplied in order to comply with the requirements of the law of North Dakota, and here I make it clear that my suggestion for changes in the label is with particular reference to compliance with the laws of North Dakota; for other states the matter must be taken up through the proper channels to secure the information.

At times the weight or measure may not be shown; the name and address of the manufacturer may not be correctly given; the size of the type may be such as to obscure the most important and essential features, while over-prominence is given to some feature which causes deception. The manufacturer is not always to blame for this. The lithographer or artist who prepared the sketch for the label desired to produce a beautiful effect in order to secure advertising advantages so he produced a label beautiful in appearance; and the manufacturer has given little time or thought to how this matter may be construed by the commissioner; while still others have given it little thought so long as it was to their trade advantage.

We have found cans labeled "Maine Sweet Corn," when as a matter of fact the corn was grown in the west but from seed brought from Maine. This is an intentional deceptive and a misleading statement. At times the quality or grade of the product, in canned goods, is not correctly given. For instance, in canned peas or canned tomatoes, it is stated, "First Quality," or "For Fancy Trade," or "For Best Family Use," when as a matter of fact the quality cannot be classed as above average standard. Such a statement is as deceptive and misleading as the labeling of a product as "Mace," when in reality the product used is Bombay Mace, which has little or no value as a condiment. This use of Bombay Mace for Penang is not one whit better than the use of cocoanut or olive stones in pepper. But the truth has been told, as far as it goes, in that the product is mace but not a mace suitable for condimental use nor what the purchaser expects to get; and it is equally misleading when it is a blend of the true mace, Penang, with Bombay, unless the words "Penang" and "Bombay" are made prominent features on the label. I even then question whether, when so labeled, deception is not practiced.

Again, we find on a label perhaps a picture representing a pod of green peas broken open; the brand may be given and the word "Peas" printed in prominent type beneath the picture, leading the purchaser to suspect or suppose that he is getting a high grade article; but somewhere else on the label we find, hardly noticeable to the average reader, the words, "Packed from Soaked Peas."

At times there have been labels which read "Strawberry Preserves," put up in attractive form, while on the back of the container would be a similar label stating, "These goods are adulterated and misbranded." What can be more ridiculous and absurd, and yet such are the conditions we must deal with.

Again, in the case of extracts, we see a product labeled "Vanilla Compound," or "Vanilla Flavors," followed by the statement that this extract is composed of vanillin and tonka or coumarin, colored with caramel. Such labeling is wrong and often by pointing out the fact to the manufacturer he is willing to make the change in order to have the product comply with the law of the State.

Sometimes a manufacturer states on his label and in his advertising literature that "this can contains only those ingredients that are sanctioned under the National Law," or "only those ingredients which are sanctioned by government officials," when as a matter of fact the product is preserved with benzoic acid, which may be stated upon the label, but usually the statement is not given prominence and the amount of benzoic acid is often above what is claimed. I have often found that the type used on the labels of all classes of food products, baking powders, canned goods, package goods, etc., was of such nature as to attract attention to those features which the public were looking for, while the less known and objectionable features were printed in type not intended to attract attention. At times extracts will be labeled on the face as "Vanillin and Coumarin Flavor," while the end of the carton will have the one word, in large black type on a white background, "Vanilla." The bottles are laid flat with this end where the public will see the same. Such a label is held to be misbranding under the North Dakota Law. Or, the weight may not be shown in good type upon the face label but tucked away somewhere in the reading matter or advertising where it does not attract attention. Again, I have seen the net weight on cartons and canned goods in type so fine that a magnifying glass was necessary to read the same.

Custom and dishonesty among a few has made it necessary for all classes of manufacturers to in a measure adopt a like method of labeling, and this has been encouraged by those who make labels for the general manufacturer. I find that very often when the manufacturer's attention is called to the real question of misbranding, he is only too glad to make the necessary change.

What I have said thus far has had to do largely with the question of foods, drugs and beverages. When it comes to the question of patent medicines, proprietary products, and those of like nature, we are dealing with a different character of products, where deception and fraud often seem to be the basic principle upon which the business is built. In fact, the literature which accompanies the container, as well as the advertising in the circulars and papers, are false and misleading intended to create an interest or desire on the part of the reader to try the virtues of the remedy. It may be a consumption cure, setting forth the great evils of consumption, the symptoms (which are often far from correct), and the great advantages to be derived from the use of this particular medicine, and which may be wholly a fake. Perhaps, it is a fat producer, or a developer for the entire body, or some particular part of the body, according to the fancy of the person who is looking for the same, as for example, "bust developers," couched in language that is intended to be somewhat mysterious and secret, savoring of quackery, but truthful enough to deceive and mislead the unwary. Here it is necessary not only to condemn in the strongest terms the character of the literature, but at the same time to educate the public to a better understanding and value of this product and its place in medicine; how the majority of such products are fakes pure and simple; and that in cases of illness, sickness, deformity, etc., it is safer to deal with an honest physician in whom one has confidence.

The writer believes that for this class of products there should be established in every State a Board whose duty it should be to pass upon all medicinal preparations, patent medicines, proprietary products, etc., before they can be permitted to be placed upon the market; the fakes to be weeded out; and all false and misleading statements withdrawn. When that day comes quackery will become largely a thing of the past.

Years of experience have, therefore, taught me to believe that the Food Commissioner may safely and properly aid the manufacturer in passing upon the labels and literature which is used, but always with a clear statement that the label as passed upon is for a specific product as represented in the label, and when a departure is made from this in putting out a product the labeling is no longer justifiable. This Department will not hesitate to denounce in the strongest terms and reverse, if necessary, the decision which has been previously made with regard to any particular label when it is found that there is deception in connection with the use of the same. The statement should also be clearly made that the label as passed upon is for the State under consideration and that its use may not be permissible in all states.

WHAT SHOULD THE ANNUAL REPORT OF FOOD EXECUTIVES INCLUDE.

By W. P. Cutler, M. D., Food and Drug Commissioner, Missouri.

As the subject is stated, it is easily a question what should be included in an annual report of a food executive. As the same is a permanent record to go into most of the public libraries, as well as into the libraries of all food control officials, and in many instances, the private libraries of individuals, certainly to be used by most food purveyors and a large number of attorneys as a reference book, the report should tell the truth, possibly the whole truth, and certainly nothing but the truth.

The first consideration as to what such a report should contain, is what the law of a given State requires.

For example, the law of the State of Missouri reads as follows:

"The commissioner shall make an annual report to the Governor, on or before the first day of January of each year, which report shall be printed and published. Such report shall cover the work of his office for the preceding year, and shall show, among other things the number of specimens of food products analyzed, and the report of the analyst upon each one when the analysis indicates the same to be contrary to law; the number of complaints entered against persons for violations of law relative to adulteration and misbranding of food and drugs; the number of convictions had and the amount of fines imposed therefor; an account of the money received and expended by him and his assistants, together with such recommendations relative to the statutes in force as his experience may justify. The commissioner is also authorized to prepare, print and distribute a monthly bulletin containing the results of inspections, the results of analysis made, or caused to be made, with proper explanations of the same, and such other information as may come to him in his official capacity relating to the adulteration and misbranding of foods and drugs so far as he may deem of benefit and advantage to the public; also a brief summary of the work done during the month by the commissioner and his assistants in the enforcement of the laws of the state."

In this case, the law is mandatory and must be followed, and to my mind practically covers the field in a report. If appropriations in other states are as they are in Missouri, I would say that the first consideration in preparing a report should be its compactness or brevity. Because of a lack of appropriation, the writer is compelled to forego the pleasure of half tones of notable persons, including himself and his assistants.

One important feature of the Missouri State Report to my mind, is in the recommendations which are required. It has been found that the Legislature treats seriously such recommendations, in that they are at least considered. While results are not always obtained the first time, an impression is made which frequently leads to good results. It will be observed that the Missouri law says that such work shall cover the work of the office for the preceding year, and then goes on to indicate practically what is meant by this. It shall state the number of specimens of food products analyzed and the report of the analyst upon each one. This means, I take it, that the report is to show, not only the character of the violation, but who is responsible for the same, to the end that the public may be warned against that particular article of food; and I am glad that the Missouri law requires this, because I believe that the public should be warned against flagrant violators of the law, and the commissioner has the authority to so publish in the event that the violator has no cause for complaint.

In our extensive inspection of the milk supply of St. Louis, the department out of over eight hundred inspections, found about three hundred violations. In detail, this will be published in the annual report as it has been in the bulletins, and people can know by this means who have been indifferent to their rights.

It will be noticed too, that the number of convictions and the number of fines imposed therefor, are required to be printed in this report. I do not observe that this is being done in some of the reports which come to my desk. I consider it a very important part of the report. It may be that all commissioners not being required to do it by law, consider it unnecessary, but this is certainly an important piece of information for the consuming public. It is true that few prosecutions, comparatively, are necessary in Missouri, because it is the policy of the department to suggest the remedy without prosecution; but when a suggestion fails, prosecution ensues, and it is rare that we lose a case in court. People who will not get right should be prosecuted, fined, and the results made public.

The financial report is, I believe, common to most all annual reports. A good many details which are published in the bulletins of the department are only summed up in the annual report. I think it is a very good plan to print bulletins through the year giving detailed information, and as these bulletins usually go to the same persons who receive the annual report, a brief re-capitulation of the yearly work only is necessary.

I feature the recommendations and then as in the report for 1911, give a summary of the year's work and then some discussions of the same. Every year brings out some particular situation of interest. The last two years, we have been, in the summer time especially, looking after eggs that are unfit, and grading cream.

One feature of the Missouri report which I do not see in other reports, is the reference to exhibits given by the department and addresses delivered before the high schools, commercial clubs, and various manufacturing associations. Again, I thought it very proper to indicate the number in pounds or packages of the articles of food condemned and destroyed in 1911. Frequently, the Missouri Food and Drug Inspection Department destroys a great many articles of food without resorting to prosecution.

Every circular of information relative to the rulings of the department is published in each annual report. Also, a summary is given of the conditions of each town visited.

In some reports I observe extracts or articles on various subjects pertaining to foods, are published. As to whether this should find a place in the annual report of a food commissioner or not, must necessarily be left to the opinion of the individual publishing the same, and upon the amount of appropriation possible, and the requirements of the law under which the report is published. A great many valuable articles are printed which should be made of permanent record for the sake of reference, and might easily find a place in the annual report of the department.

"THE PUBLIC PRESS AS AN AGENCY IN THE PURE FOOD CAUSE."

Hon. James H. Wallace, Idaho.

It has been said that not infrequently a person is found in this world who knows less about the business in which he has been or is engaged than he does about most any other kind, and possibly this is true in my case. I have spent a number of years in the ranks of journalism, and I beg to assure you that I at least quite well understand the ups and downs of the profession in its various phases. In view of this, I am sure that it is quite proper for me to assume that I understand and fully appreciate the very unique position occupied by one who wields the pen in connection with the public press.

My many years' experience and observation in newspaper work has brought to me quite a vivid realization of the power and influence of the press for good or ill in whatever cause. The influence of the press along any line, one way or the other, cannot be gainsaid. It is indeed a moulder of public opinion. In fact it is more than that. It is sometimes a most potent factor in the shaping of the destinies of nations as well as of individuals. In fact, the press that is not conscienceless can, with its very great power, a power peculiar to itself, work wonders for the good of humankind.

To become the editor of a newspaper, or of any other periodical for that matter, is to assume a tremendous responsibility, and the man whose conscience is more or less morbid and who is unmindful of the importance of his profession, is a moral misfit and is woefully out of place in an editorial sanctum or on a reportorial staff. We sometimes encounter such an individual in our official work.

All of this may not seem to you to be germane to the subject assigned me. However, I am of the opinion that it is, in a way, because it is a fact that in every phase of human activity in every community there is reflected in the people generally, in a measure at least, the sentiments of the press of that community, either for or against a cause, no matter whether the course taken by the editor of the paper be wise or unwise. Each and every newspaper becomes so closely allied with the interests of its own immediate section that it is a part of and one of the essential elements of the life and character of that section, hence the people constituting its constituency look to it as an index of opinions and for guidance in most of the material things of life. The newspaper should be the instructor and protector of the people, and that it is generally doing a splendid work along this line is acknowledged. This is particularly true in all questions involving such vital matters as the health and lives of the citizens. That the press has been particularly active along these lines and has rendered an incomparable service to humanity in the advocacy of sanitation and pure foods is fully realized and inexpressibly appreciated by the general public, the positive beneficiary of the very decidedly humanitarian work on the part of a highly considerate press. It has been found with few exceptions in the front rank in every crusade against unwholesome and impure food stuffs, ever on the alert to warn and protect the consuming public against anything and everything deleterious to health and consequently to the very stability of citizenship itself, as well as to advise its readers of the urgent need of precaution along other lines affecting the lives and well being of the people.

The fully demonstrated potentiality of activity on the part of an honest and courageous press, in any movement calculated to secure for the people a better environment and bring about a more tolerable way of living, cannot be over-estimated. In its vast scope of multitudinous labors, the State department, which we have the honor to represent, would have fallen far short of what it has been able to accomplish had it not been for the very cordial and vigorous support given by the newspapers. Our efforts to promote sanitation, protect health and secure purer food products would have been of much less avail had not the splendid assistance of the press been forthcoming; and yet it is sometimes the case that in some instances articles have appeared which have been greatly overdrawn and distorted, carrying the impression to the public that we were harsh and sometimes even cruel along some lines in the prosecution of our work; whereas had the bare facts been published, they would not in any degree have borne out the assumption that we had pursued an improper course. Sometimes we are misquoted in relation to our work, and not infrequently one of these excepted newspapers jumps at a conclusion concerning our activities, making it exceedingly embarrassing to our department. And yet our efforts have always been to secure equity, justice and protection to individuals as well as to the public at large in all their legitimate rights. While we are usually credited with the authorship of articles appearing in print concerning the activities or work of our department, not always have we given out for publication statements that have from time to time appeared in the press, or at all, and I am constrained to express the opinion that it would be far better if the editors of these papers would more frequently take us into their confidence in order that they may be put in possession of the facts in cases involving the department because of the tremendous bearing exaggerated or false statements have on our work. I believe I am safe in assuming that the editors in question have been either careless in these matters or have chosen to exhibit their contempt for our work, a regrettable fact indeed.

In regard to the publicity of our work, I desire to urge that whatever is published concerning it should be the plain, simple truth, and nothing more. The imagination should never be drawn upon in such important matters. False, misleading or derogatory statements in relation to the work of our department especially poisons the public mind against it and the harm to the splendid cause in which we are laboring is more than irreparable. Even limited public disfavor in any work is a tremendous handicap to the cause it refers to.

In such serious problems as those involving the health and lives of the people, the fullest measure of consideration should be given by the individuals into whose hands officially are committed these vital interests, and the earnest co-operation of the press should at all times be forthcoming and be eagerly sought.

I really feel that sometimes the motives and acts of representatives of our department are very much misunderstood and therefore misconstrued by the press, and as a result a false impression is given to the public. In view of this, great care should be exercised. Sometimes we are misquoted, and are then held responsible for the articles appearing in print. Sometimes an editor, or his representative, imagines that in the prosecution of our work he has discovered a plot on our part against certain individuals, and he so informs his believing readers, contending that a great wrong has been done, and that we are injuring business by giving publicity to the act of transaction complained of. Of course, this is wrong from any viewpoint. Let me urge the utmost precaution on the part of the editor or reporter in the matter of an interview.

The press, however, as a general rule, is very zealous in its support of our work. The ambitious reporter on the daily paper invades our presence with a pleasant demand for a story. Knowing the potency of publicity, we hand him over a few facts about the arrest and punishment of some offender of the food laws, and are sometimes mortified when the paper appears to see the transaction written up in flaming style, with a big head over it, calling attention to the "short weight artist," or the "pure food crook," or the "poisoner of the children." Often we are led to register a solemn vow that we will never give out any more information to the press. We know that the average business man is neither a crook nor an intentional violator of the law, and it is hard to make such see that the language of the paper is not the views of the official himself. It is this feature of yellow journalism that does more harm than good. But I am glad to know that it is the exception and not the rule. It would be the safer plan to do our own write-ups, where such an arrangement can be made with the press. Still, after all, it is the fear of publicity and not the amount of the fine imposed that makes the man who would do wrong toe the chalk line; it is this that puts the fear of God into his heart.

Not always can we get publicity. The small country newspaper hesitates about giving to the public the facts connected with the arrest of some business man in the community, for fear of losing his advertising; while the powerful dailies are sometimes controlled by political influences, and stifle information which belongs to the people. Commercial interests are sometimes powerful enough to enlist the cause of the press in a warfare against us when we attach the sale or use of some deleterious or harmful food product or substance used in the manufacture of food products. If we are courageous enough to brave such onslaughts and prosecute our work, these same influences work through the columns of the venal press and other channels until they finally "get our heads."

It is, I might say, needless to assert that in our work we have only the highest and best interests of the people at heart, and to the end that the best and purest things obtainable may come to them we are earnestly striving, with no thought of a personal character and far removed from any other consideration that might be at all questioned. We must have the earnest, honest co-operation of the press, to accomplish the object for which the laws we are enforcing were brought into existence. Mutual effort to this end can have only a result of infinite importance.

I desire to reiterate that the press more than any other agency, aside from the department itself, can aid or retard sanitary science and the saving of life, because it is one of the most ready mediums through which an appeal to the minds and hearts of the people may be most successfully made. The man with the pen has a splendid opportunity for righteous achievement. In my judgment, no better or grander work can be done by the press in the interests of a general uplift than to be ever on the alert to warn the people of the dangers that here and there beset them, to the end that lives may be protected and the standard of our citizenship improved. Our department certainly has a great mission, and the press everywhere should have a very decided part with it in the humanitarian work in which it is engaged.

Sanitation and health preservation are as old as the human race, and there seems to be no plausible reason why a fairly comprehensive knowledge along these lines should not be possessed by even the humblest citizen in the land, in any walk of life, and of ordinary intelligence. Our work is largely a campaign of education, and the press can and does play a very important part in inculcating in the minds of the people the necessity for better conditions, better foods and better modes of living.

One authority says that the human race even today, however, is only 50 per cent. efficient, that we live out less than one-half of the natural duration of life, that we consume twice as much food (and much of it mighty poor food) as is needed to maintain efficient life, that we waste as much as we use and that one-half of all human beings born into the world either die before reaching maturity or fall into the defective, delinquent or dependent classes. When we look over these statistics and also take into consideration the appalling and shameful fact that about 52 out of every 100 persons die annually in this country from preventable diseases, we cannot but fully realize the very urgent necessity for stringent measures strictly enforced to protect and conserve health and life, and the vast importance of a ready medium, such as the press, through which to convey to the people knowledge of the dangers that lie around them on every hand.

As I have already said, the most intimate relations should exist between us and the newspapers, the sure agencies through which the people largely receive their information concerning our work, and in view of the very positive and peculiar nature of his duties, the pure food commissioner and sanitary inspector should in all his activities be open and above board to the last degree, ready to give to the public through the press any and all the information to which it is reasonably entitled.

The press would do well to remember this injunction in its attitude toward our department and its work: "Sustain and Abstain." It should sustain us in every righteous undertaking and laudable purpose in behalf of the people, and abstain from criticism of our work until it has made a thorough investigation as to the merits of the case in question.

CREAMERY INSPECTION.

By B. H. Rawl.

Chief of Dairy Division, Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

The creamery originally was a plant in which only butter was manufactured. In more recent years the so-called creameries have a much wider use. In many cases ice cream, condensed milk, and numerous other products are manufactured in addition to butter. Creamery inspection as discussed in this paper, will deal primarily with plants used for the manufacture of butter, but for plants where other products are manufactured the same plan of operation would apply in the main.

Please bear in mind that we are dealing with the subject from the standpoint of the inspector rather than that of the operator of the plant, though it is necessary for us to consider the entire operation of the plant in order that we may determine intelligently the possibility of inspecting it effectively.

Purpose of Inspection.

The purpose of inspection is to insure to the consumer a clean and wholesome creamery product.

Requirements Necessary for the Production of a Clean and Wholesome Product.

The requirements may be divided into two general groups:

1. Equipment.
2. Methods.

Equipment.

The character of the equipment of a plant is of the utmost importance, because without proper equipment it is impossible to produce a clean and sanitary product regardless of the quality of the raw material or the methods used. This does not mean that the equipment must necessarily be of an extremely expensive sort, but instead that it shall be of such a character as to make sanitation both possible and economical. The following considerations in this connection are among the most important:

The arrangement of the building should be such as to make sanitary conditions possible.

Floors should be of cement or similar material. Walls and ceilings should be tight and of such material that they can be washed, preferably cement.

There should be ample light.

There should be good ventilation in order that the plant may dry out readily, that obnoxious gasses, steam, etc., may pass out at once and prevent bad odors being absorbed by the products, and also prevent steam condensing on the ceiling and dropping down in the products.

There should be ample sewerage leading entirely away from the plant, and properly disposed of.

All doors and windows should be screened so as to keep out flies. It is not unusual to see a can or vat of cream with any number of dead flies in it.

There should be a toilet and lavatory somewhere in the building properly located so as not to be a source of contamination.

The plant should be equipped with machinery that is of such a type that it can be cleaned readily.

With proper equipment the only thing else necessary for the production of a clean and wholesome product is proper service.

Methods.

The methods employed in operating the plant may be divided into three classes:

1. Selection of the raw material.
2. Manufacturing and preparing for shipment.
3. Cleaning the plant.

Selection of Cream.

Since the quality of the raw material is dependent upon the conditions which surround it prior to its arrival at the creamery, it is only the character of the service at the creamery that determines whether or not the material shall be accepted or rejected.

Cream is sometimes produced under filthy conditions. It is often held for several days in a cellar or kitchen, where it may absorb all kinds of bad odors. Then it may be shipped long distances in hot cars and stand in the sun for hours at changing or loading points. It is often the case that when cream reaches the creamery it is in a filthy and decomposed condition, offensive to the taste and smell. It is not an uncommon thing to find a cheesy black sediment in milk or cream and a considerable portion of this sediment is cow manure. I am sure that nobody would care to eat butter made from such cream if he knew it.

With the keen competition for cream most creameries are unwilling to reject such cream, although they would greatly prefer not to handle it. If all creameries would reject bad cream the farmers would stop producing it, for it is to the advantage of the farmer as well as to the creamery to produce good cream.

Manufacturing and Preparing for Shipment.

The methods employed in this part of the operation require but little discussion. Compulsory pasteurization is one of the most important needs in this connection because it destroys disease germs that will live for months in butter and also because it makes possible a product with better keeping qualities. Aside from this a sufficient amount of help under the direction of skillful butter makers is all that is required.

Cleaning Plant.

The service required in this part of the operation needs no discussion. Sufficient help, properly directed, will keep the plant clean, if it is the right kind of plant.

It is not difficult to specify what kind of equipment and what kind of methods should be employed in a creamery in order to produce a clean and wholesome product, but the main consideration is, can we maintain a system of inspection at reasonable cost that will assure to the public that the proper equipment and the proper methods are being employed in the creameries? Let us consider them separately.

Inspection of Equipment.

This phase of the inspection offers but few complications. With a law granting sufficient authority for the issuing of regulations which shall specify in detail what conditions must exist in each plant, the quality and kind of material of the floors and the walls, the amount of light and ventilation, the kind of sewerage, etc., and in a general way, the character of the machinery, it would be necessary only for the inspector to visit a plant and go over it in detail, just as though he were using the score card now in general use for scoring dairy barns, milk plants, abattoirs, etc. It would be readily determined in what particulars the buildings or equipment was in any way below the standard fixed by the regulation. The law of course would have to provide severe penalties for the violation of the regulations. In inaugurating a rigid system of inspection of the plants, there would naturally be required some time to enable the operators of the plant to make such changes and alterations as would be necessary to conform to the regulations. An undue severity at the beginning would be unnecessarily expensive to the owners of the plants, but with a little time allowed for the building of new floors or for changing gradually the old plants to meet the requirements of the regulations, it would not be a difficult matter to adjust the buildings and equipments to a standard that would make them entirely satisfactory from a sanitary standpoint.

Inspection of Methods.

The inspection of methods is much more complicated than the inspection of equipment. The latter requires only a consideration of permanent fixtures that remain the same from day to day, changing only with the normal deterioration of the plant. With the inspection of methods we look for the efficiency of individuals, which may not be the same when the inspector is present as when he is absent.

There are two systems that may be used in an inspection of methods. With either system ample authority of law providing for issuing regulations and penalties for violations are of course absolutely essential.

First, the inspector remains in the plant during the entire time that it is being operated, just as is done in the packing houses having Federal meat inspection. There, every operation of the plant is done under the eye of the inspector. For a perfect inspection service this is the only absolutely satisfactory method.

Second, the inspector visits the plants as often as is necessary and when the operator is not expecting him. The quality of the cream received during this visit would be an indication of the kind of cream the creamery is in the habit of accepting. If the creamery was in the habit of carrying out the regulations and refusing decomposed and objectionable raw cream, the farmers would soon stop delivering that kind of cream. In this way the inspector could soon regulate, to a large degree, the kind of cream that was to be accepted. The manufacturer would find it greatly to his advantage to cooperate with the inspector in this matter, for it is not to the manufacturer's interest to use low-grade raw material. The sanitary condition of the plant could be reasonably well determined during this unexpected visit. Pasteurization, which should be one of the important requirements, could be enforced by means of an automatic thermometer attachment which would record temperatures and indicate to the inspector whether the process was being properly carried out. If a plant was found to be negligent in complying with the regulations the inspector should make more frequent inspections, and these with a few prosecutions would probably bring it up to the standard.

Of the two systems of inspection, while the first would be more efficient, the cost would apparently be prohibitive. There are about 6,000 creameries in the United States, the large majority of which are small, while the packing houses which have such inspection are large and comparatively few in number. The plan of having the inspector visit the creamery frequently and when the operator is not expecting him is apparently the only feasible method of inspection.

A Standard for Cream.

While it would not be very difficult to specify how the plant should be cleaned or how the product in course of manufacture should be handled, when it comes to making a standard for cream—when it may be accepted and when it must be rejected—much more difficulty will be experienced. Of course the basis of such a standard must be wholesomeness. Up to the present time the standard of excellence has depended very largely upon the amount of acid in the cream. However, we understand that this is not necessarily a reliable index; we recognize that cream that is produced under sanitary conditions and kept at a high temperature will sour very quickly, and the acid in such cream may not necessarily indicate uncleanness. On the other hand, it is to be supposed as a general rule that where the producer of cream knows enough about the requirements for the production of good cream to keep it thoroughly clean, he knows enough to keep it cooled down to a temperature that will prevent the rapid development of acid. It is not far wrong, perhaps, to say that where we find a high acid in a cream that is not very old, it is an indication of dirt.

But there are manufactured into butter each summer thousands of cans of cream that is bad, decomposed, and filthy, and that to the ordinary eye would be regarded as unfit for human consumption. This class of raw material should be prohibited by regulations, which regulations, if not complied with, would result in the withdrawal of the inspection, thereby preventing the transportation and sale of all products from the plant in question. In the present Federal meat inspection act the provision for the withdrawal of inspection has been found to be a most effective means of enforcing the law. If each violation had to be handled in the courts it would be difficult to enforce any cream standard.

Organization of Inspection.

The creamery inspector should have ample time to give careful inspection to each plant in his territory. What number of plants an inspector could handle would depend upon the facilities for travel in the territory, as well as in the character of the plants. Under some conditions one inspector may have his hands full to give sufficient attention to 10 or 12 plants, while under other conditions he might be able to inspect 20 to 25, or possibly more. The local inspector need not be a very expensive man, so long as he has good common sense and is absolutely honest and tactful. Over the local inspectors of a given territory there should be a chief inspector, who is thoroughly qualified to deal with any questions pertaining to creamery operations that might arise. His time should be divided among the local inspectors, giving particular attention to the men who are not giving satisfaction and to new men; and he should handle all the unusual difficulties that would arise from time to time.

Do We Need Inspection of Creameries?

The object of creamery inspection is the protection of public health, but such inspection is expensive and the consumers must in some way pay the cost. The question that naturally arises, therefore, is, will the protection be sufficient to warrant the expenditure that will be required? If we knew the exact condition of every creamery in the country it would be less difficult to arrive at an answer to this question. Very sensational exaggerated and unwarranted statements are often made regarding the sanitary conditions of plants where food products are manufactured, and such statements often do harm; so let us be careful to look for facts and base our conclusions upon them. Some of our creameries are good; they are well equipped and well managed, and the products from them are probably as good as they would be under any system of inspection. What per cent of the total number are in this class it is impossible to say.

There are others, however, that are not in good condition; they are improperly constructed in the first place, and they are improperly operated in the second place. They are filthy and entirely unfit for the manufacture of human food. They are operated probably by men who have no regard for sanitation, particularly since the consumers of the product live possibly a thousand miles from the creamery. What we may term bad creameries are not all bad because of the same reasons. Some use large quantities of very bad raw material, some do not pasteurize their products, others have filthy conditions throughout the entire plant.

That creamery products do carry the germs of disease is absolutely beyond question. That many creameries not only do not destroy by pasteurization the pathogenic infection that may exist in cream, but add more through the insanitary conditions in the plant, is equally beyond question. What per cent. of bad creameries there are it is impossible to determine at this time, but it is safe to say that they are more or less common. The condition of butter does not as a rule indicate to the consumer whether it is clean or not, any more than a steak indicates the condition of the slaughterhouse from which it comes.

It is impossible to say in terms of dollars and cents the value of human health and human life, but considering all of these facts it seems decidedly inconsistent that we should give as much attention as we do to the inspection of our meat food products, which are seldom if ever consumed (in this country at least) in a raw state, and at the same time pay little or no attention to our creamery products that are usually uncooked when consumed. If the inspection of meat food products is of sufficient importance to the public health to warrant the expenditure necessary to conduct it, it would certainly seem that we would be justified in demanding a thorough creamery inspection.

State vs. Federal Inspection.

Federal inspection, as in the case of the meat inspection, would have to be based on the interstate and foreign commerce clause of the Constitution, and could be applied only to creameries doing an interstate or export business, although such plants might at the same time also sell their products within the State. State inspection would cover the plants not reached by Federal inspection, that is, those selling their product entirely within the State.

It is probable that neither State nor Federal inspection alone would be an entire success. Under Federal inspection a plant could not put out goods that are not eligible for interstate shipment. If the State in which this plant is located does not maintain a rigid system of inspection for plants supplying the local trade, it is but natural that the inferior product that would not pass inspection for interstate shipment would drift into the local plants doing a local business only and be used for local consumption. It is often the case that a creamery is located near the State line and is shipping the bulk of its product outside the State. If the State inspector should object to certain conditions or products in that creamery the creamery would at once ship all of its goods over the State line, and so remove its products from the inspection of the State in which the plant was located, unless this was prevented by Federal inspection.

The question would naturally arise in dealing with a case of this kind, "Why does not the State into which the goods are being shipped prohibit the admission of such goods?" The answer is that in many cases the State into which the goods are shipped is a thousand or more miles away from the State in which they were made. On the other hand, if there were only Federal inspection which applied only to plants producing goods for interstate shipment, the remainder of the plants producing goods for local consumption would naturally receive all the raw material that could not be accepted in plants having Federal inspection. This has been shown in the meat-inspection service, where the Federal inspection often causes sellers to send their diseased stock to uninspected plants doing a local business only. The solution of this question undoubtedly lies in a system that includes both Federal and State inspection, independently, but with laws and regulations that are similar, so that the two might work hand in hand for the accomplishment of a common end.

Such a system would require the States to maintain an inspection that would be as efficient as that of the Federal Government, or vice versa. As a rule this would place no great burden upon the State, since the great majority of creameries in most States do an interstate business.

An important feature of Federal inspection as set forth in the meat-inspection law is that railroads are prohibited from transporting from one State to another any goods that do not bear the stamp of approval of the Government. Thus, when the law is not complied with, inspection is withdrawn, and interstate shipment must cease. This makes it unnecessary to enforce regulations through the courts, and the system is very effective.

If it is legal to apply the same system in State inspected plants and prohibit them from offering for sale any products that do not bear the stamp of approval, it would be very effective.

Will Creamery Inspection Cripple the Dairy Industry?

If there is no need of the inspection, if all conditions that surround the manufacture of creamery products are just as good as they need to be to protect the consumer, then most assuredly inspection will do no injury to the industry. But such is not the case. Conditions are not what they should be in many cases, and it will cost something to correct them. For example, the creamery with half-rotten wooden floors would be required by a thorough system of inspection to put in new concrete floors. The creamery with no pasteurizing machinery would be required to install such machinery. The farmer who has no equipment for properly taking care of his cream would be required to provide it. All these things will cost money. But will not the industry as a whole be much better off when such equipments are provided? The consumer will have more confidence in the purity of creamery products than he now has.

A more important consideration, however, from the standpoint of the welfare of the industry, is that the creameries because of the equipment that an inspection system would require would be able to produce a far superior product, which in the end would sell for more money. The effect of a thorough inspection of creameries is analogous with the effect of the tuberculin test upon the dairy herd. It costs something to apply the test where it is really needed, for in such cases animals always have to be sacrificed; but when the permanency and the integrity of the business are considered it is impossible to do without it. And so the creameries that really need inspection are those that have not the proper equipment and perhaps the proper skill to best take care of their own interest.

A thorough system of inspection will prevent the wide range in quality of raw material and in this way will eliminate much of the inferior butter that is now made.

The creamery industry of the United States would unquestionably be better off with a thorough system of inspection than it is to-day. True it is that there are creameries that do not need inspection; but there are men for whom criminal laws are useless in so far as they affect them directly, yet these men above all others recognize the necessity of such laws for their own protection. The creamery that will not be improved by inspection will be benefited by having its competitors, to a large degree at least, placed upon an equal basis. A proper creamery inspection can do the creamery industry no harm.

Conclusion.

1. Proper creamery inspection would be a protection to the consumer.
2. This inspection would do no harm but on the other hand would be a benefit to the creamery industry as a whole.
3. An efficient system of creamery inspection is entirely feasible at a moderate cost.

There appears to be no good reason why the producer or the consumer should object to inspection.

Is the American public willing to pay the cost?

WHAT FORM OF PROCEDURE IS MOST EFFICIENT FOR FOOD CONTROL LAWS—THE CRIMINAL, WITH OR WITHOUT SUMMARY CONVICTION—OR CIVIL PROCEDURE.

R. M. Allen, Head Food and Dairy Division, Lexington, Ky.

At one of the Florida winter resorts is a native, it is told, who does not pretend to professional golf, but who has held the record on the local course against many of the best golfers from the best clubs of the country. The other golfers play with many clubs—a driver, a brassy-cleik, a lofter, a mashie, a putter, and so on. The Florida native plays with but one iron, which is fashioned, so it is said, like a heavy punt blade, and straight like a putter. His drives are not as long as are the drives of his many opponents, but on the whole, with much truer aim. With one iron he lifts the ball over a bunker, or clump of trees, slices it with almost the exactness of a billiard player, drives it low, true, far, lifts it on the green and puts it into the cup with a total of fewer strokes than has ever yet been equalled on that course.

It is surprising, when necessity compels, with what few tools and difficult means it is possible to accomplish desired results. When I was in London in 1903, the Irish linen makers and linen tradesmen had just succeeded in compelling a garment that is extensively sold in other countries as linen mesh to be labeled and sold as cotton and linen mesh. The result had been accomplished under an old English law which prohibits generally the adulteration of agricultural products without informing the purchaser. When the National pure food law was under final consideration in the Senate, Senator Bailey of Texas, in making one of the able arguments against the measure, stated that if his State would confer upon him the power to prosecute all dealers in adulterated and misbranded food, he would, through rigid prosecution, bring full protection to the people in Texas, without the necessity of Federal assistance. From one standpoint he was right, especially with respect to such adulterations, misstatements, and labeling as are recognized as being deleterious to health, or deceptive, and which are due to intent on the part of some of the trade to accomplish an unearned profit, even if the public health is harmed and the purchaser defrauded. Sometimes I wonder, as a food law executive, if our daily tasks could not be lightened and quicker results obtained by simply announcing to the trade that we will assume no responsibility, will not make prosecutions depend upon previous notices or warnings, but simply prosecute, swift and correct, any person whomsoever in whose hands an adulterated article of food or drug is found, intended for sale, and without inquiry as to whether that party knew of the adulteration or was responsible for it, and without inquiry as to whether or not the adulteration had been due to deterioration or unintentional contamination. And then, when a long experience floods my mind with the facts that carelessness, misguided but honest intent on the part of the trade, deficiencies in equipment and method in the manufacture and sale of foods and drugs which have obtained because of the fact that chemistry and bacteriology have not yet pointed out the proper rules, when I reflect how the inventor of the harmless substitute for milk, for egg albumen, and other products, believes that he has conferred a food benefit upon mankind, has the right to appropriate certain terms of nomenclature because of the fact that they have not belonged to any one in particular in the past, I see clearly two classes of food law violations: In one class, the dairyman who has deliberately watered or skimmed his milk, or who produced it in a dairy far below the standard of ordinary cleanliness; the baker whose every method is unsanitary; the druggist who knowingly manufactures tinctures but half strength; the food manufacturer who prepares his products out of unfit materials, and without regard for the human stomach; and for such a class, the swift, blunt, single iron of speedy indictment and prosecution under the law is, of course, the only remedy. But for the dairyman who has a fairly clean dairy, and yet, a high bacterial count, with some pathogenic germs in his milk; the druggist whose sweet spirit of nitre has become deteriorated, although not carelessly exposed, or whose asafoetida, purchased for standard U. S. P. goods, is shown by analysis to be much mixed with sand; the fruit and vegetable manufacturer who uses fresh pulp or fresh, ripe tomatoes, and whose catsup, nevertheless, shows a high bacteriological content; the manufacturer of a harmless food substitute, who honestly believes that he is entitled to the use of a particular ingredient, or a particular food term; the members of the retail and wholesale trade who are buying and selling products in good faith under the guaranties of the manufacturers, require different treatment.

It is true, that our food laws, from necessity, have eliminated intent as an element of the offense; but I construe the hearing provision as contained, for example, in the Kentucky act, as, first, for the purpose of checking any official mistakes, and, second, for the purpose of permitting us to inquire into just what person or condition is responsible for the adulteration, and then directing the criminal arm of the law towards the person intentionally responsible, or the constructive means of the law towards eliminating the unsanitary condition. Frequently, a letter sent direct to the person or firm primarily responsible, and calling attention to a violation of the law, accomplishes quicker and greater results, and with far less expense than would the taking up of samples among many retailers for the purpose of prosecution. Sometimes, such a letter calls the attention of the outside manufacturer, residing in another state, to the fact that the department has the power to publish its findings, and thus give notice to the Kentucky trade that any further sales of a particular product will be reported for prosecution. In all such instances, however, the manufacturer primarily responsible is told that full opportunity will be given to have the courts pass upon any questions of fact and law involved.

The Federal Foods and Drugs Act provides for three methods of procedure. By criminal indictment; by civil proceeding to seize and confiscate the adulterated foods; and the Secretary of Agriculture is given plenary power to shut out at the ports adulterated or misbranded products coming from other countries. The character of the food control work logically requires authority at law to proceed against the person responsible and against the adulterated and misbranded goods. It is plain, therefore, that a method for civil procedure under the laws, such as is contained in the libel provisions of the National law, should be written into each of the State laws and municipal ordinances. There are innumerable reasons for this conclusion, such as a can of contaminated milk, a side of spoiled beef, a tub of diseased oysters, a barrel of unsound fish, a case of deteriorated digitalis, in order that while justice is being done the trade injustice or harm shall not be done to the consumer. Again, a proceeding in equity, such as would attend procedure against the adulterated goods, is a better means for presenting questions of fact and law before the courts. It enables both sides, by deposition, if necessary, to obtain a fuller record of the facts. Questions of evidence have broader limitations in equity than in criminal procedure, and, therefore, for the purpose of putting a quick stop to the further sale of a harmful product, or for the purpose of having disputed questions decided before the courts, civil procedure is in the one case necessary, and in the other, to be preferred.

In most of the states, officials desire not only the consuming public, but the members of the retail and wholesale food and drug trade, to obtain as much protection as possible from the National law, and hold out to such trade that the purchase of interstate products with a properly signed guarantee against adulteration or misbranding, will be accepted in the first instance as evidence of good faith. There are many in the trade who take advantage of this, however, and, in order that the deteriorated digitalis may not go to the surgeon, as the last means for saving life, and in order that the freezer of stale ice cream, produced from unclean materials in an unclean factory located in another state, shall not go further with its tyrotoxic danger, in order that the consuming public may not be defrauded with respect to articles of every day consumption, the State and municipal authorities should have a means at law to hold up the product and then let those who assert a property right, or a trade reputation interest, be given a chance either to remove it from commerce, re-label it, or have the question as to what shall be done, passed upon by the courts.

There are some legislative details which should properly be added to the seizure provision of the Federal Foods and Drugs Act and every state law amended to contain this method of procedure against adulterations. This detail, however, is not within the scope of this paper, but my answer to the question from the chairman of this section is that the food laws should provide for three methods of procedure:

First, a criminal procedure; second, a means for proceeding against the adulterated or misbranded food or drug product; and third, full authority for the administrator to direct all the inspection and laboratory force at his command in a full investigation of all the facts, and in the working out of constructive recommendations whenever and wherever the varied fields of the food control work require.

"SHOULD A PORTION OF THE OFFICIAL SAMPLE BE GIVEN TO THE SELLER AT THE TIME OF PURCHASE."

By Hon. H. F. Potter, Connecticut.

Under the Connecticut Pure Food Law samples collected by the department must be divided into three equal parts and each part labeled with identifying marks, one of said parts must be delivered to the person from whom the purchase was made, or if a guaranty has been given, such part shall be delivered to the guarantor, one of said parts shall be sent to the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment station, and one part shall be held under seal by the Dairy and Food Commissioner. The parts of the sample so divided shall be sealed by the person collecting the same, with a seal provided for that purpose.

This question has decidedly two sides to it and for the purpose of this paper I will designate them as the merchant's side of the question, which he invariably calls his rights, and the consumer's side, which the pure food department is supposed to protect.

The merchant or purveyor of foods and drugs should be looked upon by the department which is attempting to enforce the pure food and drug laws, as an honest, upright citizen of the community where he is located, and he is entitled to that reputation until it has been proven in the courts that he is not.

It is my opinion that there are only a very few merchants who intentionally violate the food and drug laws and for this reason I believe that the merchant who wishes to do an honest business should be protected as far as possible from any errors which might possibly be made by some one connected with the food and drug department. I had rather a large number of criminals would escape punishment than to be the cause of making one innocent person a criminal.

Looking at the question from the standpoint of the merchant I can see why he might reasonably think that it would, in some instances, be a protection to him to have a part of the sample delivered to him, but taking up the other side of the question, which is the side that interests the consuming public, and I think most of you will agree with me, that if an inspector could go into a store as an ordinary customer and buy whatever he wishes without disclosing his identity he could find out very much easier whether the merchant was doing an honest business, or was deceiving his customers. After a sampling agent, who has to divide his sample with the merchant, has made one or two purchases at any particular store he becomes known by the proprietor and clerks and then he is unable to detect the clerks or the merchants who is dishonest enough to, when a customer comes into the store and asks for a quart of cider vinegar sell him compound distilled spirit and molasses vinegar if he does not happen to have the cider vinegar, and say nothing. This happens very often and it is hard for a sampling agent who is known by the proprietor and the clerks to detect the fraud. There are some merchants who think it is not a criminal act to make a sale like the one referred to above.

I could give you many other examples similar to the one just mentioned. I will only mention one more. Take for example, renovated butter. There are a good many merchants who sell renovated butter without informing the purchaser that it is renovated, but when an inspector comes into the store to buy he is known by the proprietor and when he buys renovated butter he is told the truth about it.

The honest and careful merchant has nothing to fear from a food and drug inspector but the departments need all the encouragement and help they can get to detect the fraud and deceit practiced by the careless and dishonest merchant and if the inspector can go into a store as an ordinary citizen and purchase anything that he has reason to believe is being misrepresented, without revealing his identity, he can continue to do good work for the department indefinitely; but let us look at the subject as broad minded men who are authorized to see that the pure food and drug laws are complied with. I do not think we as State officials will have any better success in our efforts to rid the State of impure and misbranded foods and drugs by appearing to antagonize the manufacturers and dealers than we will by attempting to work in harmony with them. I do not think very many of the manufacturers of, and dealers in foods and drugs mean to be dishonest in their methods but there is occasionally a person who knowingly becomes a criminal by his trickery and when we are trying to get evidence against such a man we need all the help we can have in the way of laws, some of which might seem to the honest dealer as arbitrary. All manufacturers of foods and drugs know or should know whether their goods are honestly put up or not and if they are not they should be made to suffer the penalty, and if the dealer will only demand a legal guarantee when he purchases his supply from the manufacturer or jobber he will almost invariably get goods that will comply with all of the requirements of the law.

After carefully considering this subject I cannot see why the honest merchant should care for a duplicate sample. In my experience of four or five years in this work I do not think a half dozen duplicate samples have been analyzed by the merchant from whom the sample was taken and this would indicate to me that the duplicate was really not cared for. If this is the fact why should the State Department be required to go to this extra expense and trouble. If all men were honest in their business dealings with others there would be no need of a pure food and drug law; these laws are placed on our statute books for the protection of the public and the men who are authorized to enforce such laws should be given all the help possible in their efforts to detect fraud.

In closing I wish to state to this convention that I think probably all of the men empowered to enforce the food and drug laws are honorable men and are attempting as best they can to see that all deceit and trickery is exposed and the guilty person made to pay the penalty, but do not make the mistake, which some will find very easy to make, by attempting to gain notoriety by causing a larger number of prosecutions to be made than did the former commissioner. I think more credit should be given a department which succeeds in having the laws complied with without many prosecutions than one which causes a large number to be made, and this can only be accomplished by co-operation and not by antagonizing the manufacturers and merchants.

Finally let us all go to work with the determination to try and make our own State the best State in the Union, as far as living up to the requirements of the food and drug laws is concerned, and if you think you can accomplish more by not being required to leave a part of the sample with the merchant then it will be your duty to try and have the law so framed, but if conditions in your State are such that in your opinion you can accomplish more by leaving a portion of the sample purchased with the merchant, then it is your duty to try and have the law framed that way.

MEETINGS OF SECTION B.

Section of Food Analysts.

The following summary of the proceedings of this section has been prepared, at the Commissioner's request, by Dr. William Frear, President of the Section:

Proceedings of Section B.

The proceedings opened with a brief address by the President Wm. Frear, of Pennsylvania, in which the various duties of the chemist in the work of the food and drug control were considered, the needs for conference with respect to each of these duties, and the fact that existing chemical organizations, while fully covering certain sides of the official chemist's work, leaves others uncared for; hence the desirability of undertaking, in this new organization, to care for those phases of work not already well provided for.

In another paper entitled "A Discussion of the Object to be Attained by Section C," Dr. T. J. Bryan, of Illinois, approaching the subject from a somewhat different starting point, urged the same conclusions. He further expressed the judgment that there were probably sufficient media of publication for such chemical matters as might be presented before the new organization, and that the contributors to the Section program should therefore be free to publish where their papers would be accessible to the largest number of readers.

Dr. A. W. Cook, of South Dakota, related some investigations made under his direction to determine "The Relative Toxicity of Substances Found in Foods." The method employed was to test the resistant power of frogs and gold fishes respectively, to the several substances, 24 in all, each introduced in increasing proportion into the water in which the animals were placed. The results showed very different degrees of resistance by the frogs and fishes, but that to some substances the frogs were highly sensitive and the fish resistant, while, with respect to other substances, the fish were sensitive and the frogs resistant. He had therefore been driven to the conclusion that the degree of injuriousness of a particular substance and its relative poisonous action, as compared with that of any other substance, for a particular animal species, cannot safely be inferred from the facts of this kind ascertained by experiments upon other animal species, even where the life habits were similar and the methods of experiment identical.

In a paper "On the Disappearance of Added Formaldehyde in Milk," Dr. M. E. Jaffa and C. H. Charles, of California, presented the results of certain investigations made because of the claim made by certain manufacturing interests that formaldehyde added to milk rapidly disappears, especially when the milk is kept at 75° F., and hence cannot be found in cases where samples are not taken and analyzed at once, especially in warm weather. In the experiments, formaldehyde was added in proportions varying from one part in 5,000 to one part in 25,000. The Leach test was used. With samples held at 65° F., the tests were negative only after 13 days in case of the 1:25,000 dilution; not until after 61 days, in case of the 1:8,000 dilution. The results on keeping the milk at 75° F. were not very different. The test is therefore trustworthy through a period much greater than that which must elapse between the addition of the formaldehyde and the time of the test under ordinary control conditions.

Under the title "Interpretation of Vinegar Analyses," W. H. Harrison, of Illinois, discussed the characters of spurious cider vinegars that were evidently sugar vinegars mixed with distilled vinegar. Of these, three types appeared, containing quantities of 4 per cent. or more of molasses vinegar, or in other cases, of sugar vinegar. Genuine 'black strap vinegar' of 5 per cent. acidity, contained solids, 8.61 per cent.; ash 2.1 per cent., non-sugar solids, 7.37 per cent.; ash in non-sugar solids, 28.2 per cent., soluble phosphoric acid in ash, trace; insoluble phosphoric acid in ash for 100 g. of vinegar, 49.7 milligrams; alkalinity of ash, 24.0. The Illinois control holds that when 4 per cent. of molasses vinegar is added to distilled vinegar, the addition is solely for the purpose of coloring.

Discussing the "Duties of a Food Chemist as a Witness for the State," William Frear, of Pennsylvania, urged that the attitude of the chemist as a witness should be that simply of an expert judge of the facts, and not at all that of a prosecutor or of an expert's witness; and that his conduct during a trial should be maintained in careful conformity to this theory of his relationship, despite the difficulties, internal and external, that tend to deflect him from this course.

H. M. Loomis, Chief of the Seattle Laboratory of the U. S. Bureau of Chemistry, gave by request, a most interesting discussion of "The Arrangement of the Food Laboratory."

Special forms of apparatus for the determination of benzoic acid and of fats in liquid foods were described by William Frear and by William Brinsmaid, of Illinois.

An hour was given to a round table discussion on "Laboratory Records for the Official Food Laboratory." The discussion was opened by E. L. Redfern, of Nebraska, and shared by most of the official chemists present.

Fern L. Shannon, of Michigan, in a paper on "Formic Acid in Food Products," related the discovery of the use of this acid as a food preservative, and described the methods adopted for its determination. Dr. H. E. Barnard, of Indiana, described results obtained under his direction by application of these methods both to individual food materials and to manufactured products, noting particularly that formic acid occurs in determinable quantity in a number of relative food materials.

Mr. Craig Atmore, President of the National Preservers' Association, read a highly interesting paper upon "Mince Meat Standards," in which he gave an historical sketch of this product and an analytical statement of its numerous recipes. On these bases he urged that it should be classed as a "dessert," rather than as a meat product, such as meat pie; and that, concordantly, the 10 per cent. meat requirement of the present standard should at least be reduced. The difficulties in applying a single standard to both cut and condensed mince meats were set forth.

Dr. E. F. Ladd, of North Dakota, described mince meat conditions in his State. Out of 50 samples, cut and condensed, 19 contained no meat, 18 contained but 3 to 6 per cent.; the balance 6 to 10 per cent. Seven samples contained glucose, some about 10 per cent.; others over 40 per cent. Twenty-three samples contained added cereal. The value of a small percentage of cereal to absorb the last traces of sirupy liquor in condensed mince meat and thus avoid discoloration of the carton containers, was noted. The apparent use of meat extract in place of meat was also noted. Insoluble protein, in quantity greater than one per cent. is probably to be attributed to meat.

Dr. A. N. Cook, of South Dakota, opened a discussion upon the "Analysis of Catsup" with particular reference to the difficulties in avoiding the formation of emulsions in extraction with immiscible solvents. The principal novel suggestion developed was that by Dr. Barnard of increasing the proportion of salt used in the La Wall method.

The commercial "Compound Mustards" were discussed by H. E. Barnard and H. E. Bishop, of Indiana, in their relation to the Federal standard.

G. R. Stewart, of California, presented an interesting paper "On the Determination of Fat in Ice Cream." The use of centrifugal methods of fat separation for this product has been criticised. The writer finds, however, that the results obtained on ice cream of known composition representing a variety of recipes. (?) William Frear, of Pennsylvania, noted similar results in experiments made under his direction by J. W. White, at the Pennsylvania Experiment Station, and urged the special need for care in securing samples from partially melted creams. The thickeners used in these experiments, including gums, gelatin, starch and eggs, did not interfere with analytical success. J. R. Chittick, of Iowa, stated that in 60 tests by the Howard method on samples of known composition, he had obtained concordant and theoretical results.

A note by C. H. LeWall, of Pennsylvania, on possible error in formaldehyde detection owing to the presence of vanillin was read by the Secretary. In the discussion following, the need was noted for care as to temperature conditions in the testing of milk for this preservative.

"New Data on the Composition of the Oyster" was presented by H. E. Barnard, Emma Crandal, and Charles Coffin, of Indiana. A high degree of variability in composition of shell—oysters was developed.

Prof. Willard, of Kansas, noted that the proportion of solids (10 per cent.) required in Kansas is far less than appears in oysters fresh from the sea (15 to 20 per cent. H. Harms, of Utah, noted the occurrence in oysters of copper in quantity giving rise to symptoms of copper poisoning.

In the first business session, a constitution and by-laws were adopted, a committee appointed to express to the main association, the preferences of the section with respect to its relations to the association, and officers were elected for the coming year:

President, William Frear, of Pennsylvania.

Vice-President, J. R. Chittick, of Iowa.

Secretary, T. J. Bryan, of Illinois.

Rotten Butter in Ice Cream.

At the session of Section A of the State and National Food and Drug Commissioners, in Seattle, on Wednesday afternoon, July 10, a discussion came up which is thus reported by the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of the following day:

Thirty per cent. of the ice cream sold in the country is impure, according to the opinion expressed by many of the food and drug experts assembled in this city at the afternoon session of the sixteenth annual convention of the American Food and Drug Association yesterday at Bagley hall, Washington university.

The question of ice cream was brought up late in the afternoon by James Foust, State Food Commissioner of Pennsylvania, when he made the sensational statement that cream was being made in the east by the mixing of skimmed milk and sometimes good, but often rotten butter. In the discussion that followed it was brought out that the butter was used to give the cream the amount of butter fat required under the law, and that high flavors were used to kill the taste of the spoiled butter. It was also brought out that in the east, where there are long freight hauls from the milk-producing districts to the larger cities, such cream is served in hotels and cafes.

This point was brought out by B. H. Rawl, of Washington, D. C., Chief of the Bureau of Foods, of the Department of Agriculture, who stated that while he did not defend the practice, he could not see any real harm in it if only pure and clean milk and butter were used and the people were informed about what they were buying by a label, as is used in the meat-packing business.

Many entered into the discussion, and all seemed to have some knowledge of the use of spoiled butter and skimmed milk for the making of a cream to be used in the manufacturing of ice cream, but said that the practice was more prevalent in the east than in the middle and far west.

Commissioner Foust, of Pennsylvania, said that he believed that much of the sickness following the eating of ice cream, especially among children could be traced to "made cream," and that in his own State the practice was extensive. Washington was one of the few states in which there was no knowledge of this practice.

It is the intention of Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust to take up this matter and have the situation in Pennsylvania thoroughly investigated. He believes existing laws are so framed as to reach and crush out this latest evil in the food line; should the contrary prove true the attention of the legislature will be directed to the situation and an effort made to provide an effective remedy. It is said the bogus cream is produced because the supply of the genuine article is insufficient to supply the demand.

An Able and Courteous Presiding Officer.

During the recent annual meeting of the State and National Association of Dairy and Food Commissioners at Seattle, those in attendance were highly pleased with the courteous and admirably impartial manner with which President Brown discharged the duties of his office. At such a meeting various opinions must prevail and sometimes controversy takes on a decidedly animated tone. There never was a time, however, when the presiding officer was other than the courteous and affable gentleman, resourceful and self-reliant, and greatly aiding the dispatch of business and the modification of the asperities of debate by his constant hold upon the situation.

President Brown's annual report was one of the most elaborate and instructive ever presented at a meeting of the Association. The mass of figures contained in it and the wealth of facts and illustrations presented showed that its author had taken infinite pains and had engaged in an extensive correspondence, for in no other way could the facts contained in the report have been gathered. It was entirely fitting that the convention should reciprocate his courtesy, his impartiality, his intense and enthusiastic interest and his amazing industry by a unanimous and hearty vote of thanks.

An Unrecorded Incident.

One item that does not appear in the Association proceedings has public interest. The Committee on Resolutions, bearing in mind Dr. Harvey W. Wiley's long membership in the Association and his eminent services in the pure food cause, believed it fitting that the Association should, at his retirement from official service, express its appreciation of his valuable constructive work and his public devotion, accordingly the following resolution was recommended for adoption:

Recognizing in Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the Nestor of Pure Food activity in America and the leader in securing the enactment of the National Food and Drug Act, this convention expresses to Dr. Wiley its warm appreciation of his unswerving devotion to the consumers' welfare, and of the value of his constructive work in many branches of agricultural and food chemistry.

The vote was, Aye, 42; Nay, 44. Pennsylvania's vote was 'Aye,' because the Commissioner knows that in so voting, he was expressing the sentiment of the public press, the medical association, and especially the food and drug consumers of this great Commonwealth.

DEATH OF PROF. GEORGE M. WHITAKER.

In the sudden death of Professor George M. Whitaker, secretary of the National Dairy Union and associate editor of Hoard's Dairyman, the American cow has lost one of her best friends. Professor Whitaker was for many years connected with the Dairy Division of the National Department of Agriculture at Washington. His death occurred August 29th, 1912, at Ft. Atkinson, Wisconsin, without any previous intimation of failing health.

For a long time Professor Whitaker had travelled over the length and breadth of the country, speaking at farmers' institutes, dairy meetings and other assemblies of the people where dairy interests were discussed, and he was probably more widely known among the farmers of the United States than any other man in the country. He was also a fine journalist as well as an accomplished orator, and in the course of his life was able to impress his ideas upon many thousands of his fellow citizens.

If Professor Whitaker had one hobby it concerned the sanitary protection of the cow. He had studied this valuable friend of the human race. He knew much about her value. He insisted that she was entitled to proper care and protection. Everywhere he went he told the people what the cow means to our national life and insisted upon her adequate protection, not only on account of the immense value and absolute necessity of her dairy products, but also because of her continuous worth as an enricher of the soil.

In the death of this devoted servant of the dairy interests of the country those interests lose a valuable helper and the nation has sustained a loss that can never be fully supplied. He was a man of the highest character, a cultured gentleman whom it was a pleasure and a source of information to meet. All who knew him will join the Bulletin in regretting his death.

HEARING ON THE LEVER OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

The Dairy and Food Bureau of the Department of Agriculture of this Commonwealth has no prejudice against oleomargarine as such, but it believes that no article sold to the people as a food product should be other than what it pretends to be, and it has ever stood for the enactment and enforcement of laws calculated to prevent fraud and to punish those who undertake in any way to deceive the people. It has had no little trouble with fraudulent vending of oleomargarine, which has been repeatedly sold to honest consumers as genuine butter. Recognizing the comparative ease with which the colored product can be palmed off upon the unsuspecting purchaser, the State of Pennsylvania has a law which makes it an offense to manufacture or sell oleomargarine, or any preparation thereof that has been colored to resemble yellow butter. The Dairy and Food Bureau naturally desires to enforce that wholesome act and to prevent the enactment, either at Harrisburg or Washington, of any statute which would render the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine less difficult.

That is the reason the Bureau was represented at the hearing before the Committee on Agriculture, at Washington, on "Pennsylvania Day," when the Lever bill was under discussion, and because the dairymen of this State in particular, and the people in general, are greatly interested in this matter, we devote a very considerable portion of this number of the Bulletin to a reproduction of the letter of Commissioner Foust, dealing with objections to the Lever bill, as well as to the suggestions and explanations of Attorney Woodward, who represented the Dairy and Food Bureau in the unavoidable absence of the Commissioner. Hon. William T. Creasy, head of the State Grange of Pennsylvania, presided over the Keystone contingent and introduced the several speakers. He also spoke from the standpoint of the Grange. Readers of the Bulletin will be interested in the reproduction of the essential parts of the proceedings, so far as they affect Pennsylvania's attitude toward this very important matter, one full of meaning to the dairy interests of the State, as well as to the consumer who objects to paying for one article and receiving another. It may be well to say here that the House Committee on Agriculture has exhibited wonderful patience at these hearings and there is every reason to believe its members are anxious to do the fair and equitable thing by every interest. This is all any right-minded citizen could ask.

Mr. Woodward not only read Commissioner Foust's letter, but also kindly entered into the matter with the gentlemen of the Committee and explained whatever may have excited their interest. He ably re-inforced the contention of the Commissioner that the enactment of the Lever bill would practically nullify the law of Pennsylvania, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of colored oleomargarine, and that it would similarly affect other state laws of the same sort, thus allowing the oleo manufacturers and venders to snap their fingers at state laws. He presented the matter in such a favorable light as to deeply impress the Committee. Mr. Woodward has been chief counsel of the Dairy and Food Division for the past eight years. He has tried cases for the Division in every part of the State and has proved himself an able and vigilant guardian of the interests of the people. In this particular instance, he again rendered signal service in the cause of justice and is entitled to the thanks of all the people.

We are not going to question the motives of those who insist upon the enactment of a national law legalizing the preparation of colored oleomargarine precisely as butter is prepared for market, but we do mean to protest strenuously and repeatedly against the placing of any such statute upon the federal books. The aim of all food laws, national or state, should be to insure purity in products and absolute truthfulness in labels. That is not a good measure which threatens to supersede wholesome state prohibitions by loose regulations almost sure to increase the temptation and the opportunity to commit fraud on the public at the expense of an old and important industry.

PENNSYLVANIA AND PROPOSED OLEOMARGARINE LAWS.

Letter from Commissioner Foust, Remarks by Attorney Woodward, and Other Matters of Interest to the People.

The Bulletin herewith presents for the information of its readers a letter by Commissioner Foust wherein certain grave objections are made to the Lever Oleomargarine Act. This letter was read by Attorney Woodward to the Committee on Agriculture of the House, and supplemented by certain pertinent remarks bearing on matters of interest before said Committee. As much of the proceedings as relate to Pennsylvania's objection to any legislation that would make impossible the enforcement of its law regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine within this Commonwealth, is herewith given:

Mr. Creasy. Gentlemen of the Committee, we have just a few members here, and it will not take such a great while, I suppose, to hear them. The first gentleman that I will introduce to the Committee is Mr. Critchfield, the Secretary of Agriculture of the State of Pennsylvania.

STATEMENT OF HON. N. B. CRITCHFIELD, SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. Critchfield: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I came here this morning not expecting to say a word, but simply as a spectator; and in violation of a command given many years ago by as good authority as St. Paul, who said, "Lay hands suddenly upon no man," the master of the State Grange has laid hands upon me and has placed me in a very embarrassing situation. It is certainly taking very great advantage of my youth and inexperience to call me up in this summary manner.

I am a farmer and not a dairyman. Upon my own farm we try to make butter enough to meet our own wants and to have a little to spare to others, and yet I have never given this question a close study. Therefore, I feel it would be entirely out of order for me to attempt to talk to such a Committee as I see here. I think I understand too well how well you are posted and how important it is that no one shall attempt to talk to you unless he has carefully prepared the statement he expects to make. I came here particularly to see how well the representatives of Pennsylvania would perform the service that has been committed to them by our people.

The Department of Agriculture in the State of Pennsylvania has charge of the dairy work of the State, and yet the Secretary of Agriculture has but very little personal supervision of this work. We have our Dairy and Food Bureau, and that is under the supervision of a Dairy and Food Commissioner, and, finding at the last moment that it would be impossible for him to attend, he has sent a representative to take the place before this Committee that should be occupied by the Department.

I hope, therefore, that you will excuse me from entering into any argument. I freely admit that I am not prepared to make any such argument, notwithstanding the fact that I was brought up on a farm and have always lived upon, and operated a farm during all the years of my business life. One of the gentlemen who has spoken to you to-day said he spent about ten years upon the milk stool, and when he made that remark, it occurred to me that I had gotten about half of my growth up and down—not this way (indicating)—between the plow handles, and so I could not be expected, without preparation, to make a speech such as ought to be made before such an intelligent committee as I see here.

I am glad, to have had this opportunity to look into your faces, and before I take my seat I want to say that as far as the head of the Department of Agriculture of Pennsylvania is concerned, we shall be satisfied with such legislation upon the oleomargarine question as will give us oleomargarine in such form that it cannot be sold for butter. We will be satisfied with that, I believe.

Mr. Creasy. I will call on Mr. Woodward, the Attorney for the Dairy and Food Department of Pennsylvania.

STATEMENT OF MR. A. H. WOODWARD, ATTORNEY FOR THE DAIRY AND FOOD DEPARTMENT OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. Woodward. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, as you have just heard, I am not a farmer, although I was raised on a farm and in Pennsylvania. I think, possibly, you have heard something about Pennsylvania, as you have gone along in this Committee. The Department is concerned more with the administrative features of your law than with the color question, although we believe that the administrative features of the law will depend much upon what you do with reference to the color question.

Mr. James Foust, the Dairy and Food Commissioner of the State, is the officer who has charge of the enforcement of our oleomargarine laws in the State; he has also the duty of the enforcement imposed upon him by law, of all the food laws of the State; hence his name—Dairy and Food Commissioner. As you have heard, his bureau is a bureau under the Agricultural Department of the State. Mr. Foust was unable to come here because he was called away, and because of that fact he asked me to come here to appear before your Committee. Suddenly, and without any great consideration of the subject, I have been projected before you, as it were, catapulted into the committee room here. Mr. Foust, however, before sending me, or at the time of sending me, committed to my care a letter which he has addressed to your Committee, which he desires to have placed in the record. In this way he desires to put himself on record in reference to this proposition, and I beg your indulgence while I read it to you:

Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture,
Dairy and Food Division,
Harrisburg, March 15, 1912.

To the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen: Being unable to be present in person at the hearing accorded to Pennsylvania interests relative to House bill 20196, introduced into Congress by Congressman Lever and referred to your Committee, I beg to submit in writing my objections to the proposed legislation.

I am the Dairy and Food Commissioner of the State of Pennsylvania, and as such am charged with the enforcement generally of all the food laws of the Commonwealth, including the legislation of the Commonwealth respecting oleomargarine. The legislation on the subject of oleomargarine in force in the State of Pennsylvania at this time is embraced in an Act of Assembly of Pennsylvania, approved the 29th day of May, A. D. 1901, and is to be found in the pamphlet laws of the State for that year at page 327. That law is a license law and provides for the sale of uncolored oleomargarine by licensed dealers who pay an annual license to the Commonwealth. The law forbids the sale of oleomargarine unless the same is made and kept free from all coloration or ingredients causing it to look like yellow butter. Under our law, yellow oleomargarine, no matter whether the color is produced by artificial dyes or is produced by the materials used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, is prohibited and our appellate courts, both Superior and Supreme, have in several decisions upheld both the constitutionality of this act as a valid exercise of the police power of the State, and the construction of the statute which makes it apply as well to oleomargarine in which a yellow color is produced by a selection and manipulation of ingredients as to oleomargarine that is artificially colored yellow.

Recently two decisions have been handed down by our Superior Court, the effect of which must be to totally exclude from the State any oleomargarine having a yellow color, no matter how that color is produced, so that the provisions of the Act of 1901 are now so thoroughly interpreted by the Appellate Courts that there can be no longer any doubt as to the meaning of the statute.

The objections that I have as an executive officer to the bill before your Committee, so far as that bill would apply, if a law, to the State of Pennsylvania and so far as it affects the State legislation on the subject of oleomargarine, are briefly as follows:

First. I object to the change of the name of oleomargarine to margarine, for the reason that the name oleomargarine has been in common use for many years, has come to be well understood by the public generally, and is the name under which oleomargarine, butterine, and similar substances have been dealt with by the State legislatures of the several States. To change the name now would, so far as I can see, accomplish no good purpose, while it would lead to endless confusion on the part of the public and possibly might lead to serious complications in the enforcement of many of our State laws. I am not advised as to the reason or reasons which have moved the backers of this particular bill to change the name of the substance or substances which constitute its subject matter, and am not, therefore, prepared to say that said change is made from any sinister purpose, but I cannot but feel that the effect of that change will be as stated.

Second. The provisions of section 4 of the proposed law are those to which I object most seriously. It is manifest that the purpose of some of the provisions of that section and possibly the effect of those provisions is to break down and destroy the laws of the several states upon the subject of oleomargarine. By that section margarine is to be put up in separate prints or bricks of one-half or one pound, contained in cartons, metal or fiber containers. Such cartons, metal or fiber containers in which such prints or bricks are inclosed, are to be known as "Manufacturers' original packages." The evident purpose of these provisions of the proposed law is to enable oleomargarine to be sold within the State in original packages suitable and convenient for retail and yet not be subject to the police regulations of the State controlling and regulating the sale of oleomargarine. Under this section of the proposed law, if the same is construed by the courts to effectuate the purpose which the proposers of this bill have in mind, it will be entirely possible for oleomargarine to be sold within the States even at retail and yet not pay any revenue to the State and not be subject to control or regulation by the State. A manufacturer located at Chicago can ship directly to a dealer in Pennsylvania and the dealer in Pennsylvania sell by retail as his customers desire and the sale be protected under this law by reason of the claim that it is made in the original package and therefore is within the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution.

Heretofore it has been the province of the courts to determine what is and what is not an original package within the protection of the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, but this bill proposes to have Congress define as to oleomargarine what shall constitute an original package, and this definition is manifestly so framed as to operate, in effect, to destroy the police control which the States ought to have over commodities sold at retail within the State. If this bill is passed and becomes a law, it establishes an entirely new precedent for congressional legislation and one fraught with much mischief. If the statutes of the States regulating and controlling the sale of oleomargarine can thus in effect be destroyed by the Federal Government and the police power of the State thus abridged, it is possible for the United States Government by its legislation to practically overthrow the police control which the States ought to have over the food, drugs, liquors and other like commodities sold within the State. A State having a prohibitory liquor law enacted as the deliberate judgment of its citizens to protect its people from the apprehended dangers of the sale and use of intoxicating liquors may find that Congress under the guise of control and regulation of interstate traffic has in effect overthrown the statutory or constitutional prohibition of the State.

A bill similar to the bill now offered in Congress was at the last session of the Legislature of Pennsylvania there offered, but it failed to become a law. The people of Pennsylvania are evidently satisfied with their present legislation on the subject of oleomargarine, and the question now is whether that is to be done by indirection which could not be accomplished directly through the medium of the Legislature of the State. In other words, whether the Congress of the United States is to practically compel the State of Pennsylvania to accept a measure relating to her own internal economy and clearly within her police power after that same measure has been rejected by her own people. If the purpose of this proposed bill is not as here stated by me, then let the people who are back of it agree to the following amendment to be inserted after the word "packages," in the seventeenth line on page 6 of the proposed bill, viz:

"Provided, however, That all margarine transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage shall upon arrival in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory, enacted in the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such margarine had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise."

Third. Even though the so-called "manufacturers' original packages," will not protect the sale of oleomargarine within the State where said oleomargarine is not made in accordance with the laws of the State, yet it would operate to very seriously hinder and prevent the enforcement of the law of the State. For instance, Pennsylvania has a prohibitive law as to colored oleomargarine. Whether or not that legislation is wise legislation it is not for the Congress of the United States to say. The State, in the exercise of its police power, has a perfect right to enact such legislation. The primary purpose of all legislation, so far as the States are concerned, is to compel oleomargarine to be sold for what it is, to prevent its sale as butter, and to prevent the fraud and deception so commonly practiced in the sale of oleomargarine. This purpose in the States is generally sought to be accomplished by legislation requiring oleomargarine to be kept free from coloration or ingredients causing it to look like yellow butter. It is generally recognized that the indiscriminate and unrestricted sale of oleomargarine will permit the unscrupulous to practice fraud and deception upon the consumer. In order to prevent this, the legislation enacted not only in this country but in foreign countries as well, has been such as to prevent or restrict the use by the manufacturers of oleomargarine of the color that is characteristic of butter, so that the two articles should be clearly differentiated in the matter of color. Experience has shown that no better method to prevent fraud and deception upon the ultimate consumer can be devised. No better proof of this fact can be found than the almost universal use of the color line by the States and by foreign countries, furnishes.

The original package scheme now proposed is an effort to change the course of legislation in this Nation on a subject in which there has been comparative unanimity heretofore as to the action of the several States. The declared purpose of this original-package measure is to prevent fraud and deception, or as stated in the title, to protect the consumers, dealers, and manufacturer of margarine against fraud. In attempting to do this the proposed measure, if enacted, will in its practical effect destroy practically all State legislation having the same purpose and will set up instead a new, untried, and therefore, at least, doubtful method for the accomplishment of the same purpose. The fact that this measure is an innovation in legislation, that its effect will be to destroy the protective legislation of most of our States and that it has no justification by experience, either in this country or foreign countries, ought to require that its availability to accomplish its purposes shall in all respects be clear and beyond reasonable doubt. Any law to be absolutely effective in the prevention of deception in the handling, use and sale of oleomargarine must be such a law as will protect the ultimate consumer. If the consumer under present legislation knows that the color of butter is yellow and that the color of oleomargarine is white, using both of these terms relatively, he is not apt to buy or consume oleomargarine believing that he is getting or using butter. No matter whether the article is presented to him from the grocer's shelf, on the table of the hotel, restaurant, or boarding house, or in his family; no matter whether it is presented in tub, roll, print, or in the smaller quantities in which it is served upon the table, he is advised immediately and conclusively by its color as to its character. The proposed legislation will not and cannot accomplish this result. The original package will not reach the ultimate consumer, and instead of this legislation preventing fraud, it will be an inducement to fraud, so far as the ultimate consumer is concerned; for it will result in destroying the only means which he now has of distinguishing oleomargarine from butter, and will substitute no other effective method. It will enable the hotel keeper, restaurant keeper, boarding house keeper, and others to readily deceive their patrons.

The passage of this act will render difficult, if not impossible, the enforcement of State laws founded upon color distinctions. We have in Pennsylvania about 900 dealers in oleomargarine. These dealers are licensed by the State. The method of enforcing the law in the matter of the sale of oleomargarine is by agents of the department having charge of the enforcement of the law. These agents go over the State from store to store, and from dealer to dealer, and are advised immediately by the color of the oleomargarine offered for sale as to whether or not the State law is being observed. They buy from the goods displayed, and of course buy that which seems to them to be contrary to law. If this original-package measure becomes a law, the agents will have serious difficulty and cannot, without a great deal of additional expense, find out whether or not a dealer is selling oleomargarine in compliance with our law. A tricky or unscrupulous dealer would have on hand two kinds of oleomargarine, the yellow which he sold to his own customers and the white which he kept for sale only to the stranger, and thus the agent of the department, if he bought oleomargarine at such store, would buy only white oleomargarine kept only for the purpose of selling to pure-food agents. Of course, by careful investigation, and by the considerable loss of time and expense the dealer might be caught in his trickery, but it is certainly true that the enforcement of our State law would by the passage of this package measure, be made a great deal more expensive as well as probably ineffective. Oleomargarine is a substitute for butter; it imitates butter so closely, except in the matter of color, that only the experienced after careful examination can distinguish between the two. Because of this resemblance there is always more or less danger of oleomargarine being sold as butter. It would seem that the way to minimize this danger is to decrease the resemblance rather than to increase it, but the measure before Congress is intended, instead of decreasing the resemblance to strike down and destroy the one attribute wherein the two substances in their natural state are different, viz: the attribute of color. If the real purpose of this legislation is, as its title purports, to prevent fraud, it seems to the uninitiated that the provisions in the body of the measure are at war with the title, and that the only effect which the passage of this measure can have is to increase the deception already practiced to such a large extent by the venders of oleomargarine.

For the reason that the proposed measure is ill-advised and untimely; that it, without reason or justification, changes the name of a well-known article of commerce so as to lead to confusion and possible fraud; for the reason that the measure is an attempt to legislate as to a subject matter that ought to be exclusively in the control of the States; for the reason that it is a thinly veneered attempt to override and destroy the laws of the several States upon this subject matter and to usurp by Congress police control that of right belongs to the several States; for the reason that instead of preventing fraud, the proposed measure will, as to the ultimate consumer, have a tendency to increase fraud; for the reason that this measure will render difficult, if not impossible, the execution of the laws of the several States upon this subject matter; I, as an executive officer, charged with the execution of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania relative to oleomargarine, protest and oppose the passage thereof.

James Foust,
Dairy and Food Commissioner.

Gentlemen, I do not think I have anything further to add to that letter.

Mr. Rubey. Have you manufacturers of oleomargarine in Pennsylvania?

Mr. Woodward. I do not know that we have to-day, but we did have.

Mr. Rubey. Is oleomargarine sold in your State?

Mr. Woodward. Yes sir.

Mr. Rubey. Are there many violations of the law at the present time in the sale of oleomargarine?

Mr. Woodward. Not many.

Mr. Rubey. How long has the law been on the statute book?

Mr. Woodward. Since 1901.

Mr. Rubey. As the years pass by do these violations increase or decrease?

Mr. Woodward. They have decreased within the last two years; up to that time they increased owing to the fact that we had no conclusive interpretation of the law, but which we now have.

Mr. Rubey. Would the passage of this law put the manufacturers of oleomargarine out of business in your State?

Mr. Woodward. Manufacturers? We have none.

Mr. Rubey. And never had any?

Mr. Woodward. We had before this law passed, years ago.

Mr. Rubey. Was it the passage of this law and the adoption of the color line that caused them to cease manufacturing?

Mr. Woodward. I would not say that, because I do not know when they went out of business relative to the time of the passage of this law. We did have a prohibitive law in Pennsylvania; the act of 1885 was a prohibitive law; that was followed by the act of 1897 and then by the act of 1901. We have had three acts upon this subject.

Mr. Lever. Did I understand you to say that the manufacture of oleomargarine ceased in Pennsylvania after the latest enactment on the subject?

Mr. Woodward. I cannot say as to when it ceased relative to the passage of the act. It was never manufactured in our State to any great extent.

Mr. Jelke. You are counsel for the dairy interest?

Mr. Woodward. I am general counsel for the Dairy and Food Department.

Mr. Jelke. The letter you have just read is from your chief?

Mr. Woodward. Yes sir.

Mr. Jelke. And you like the Pennsylvania law very well?

Mr. Woodward. We like it now because we have threshed out all the legal propositions that are connected with it, and we know what the law is, and the dealers know what the law is. I think they are going to make an effort to comply with the law and that it will be enforced in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Jelke. And you consider it very effective?

Mr. Woodward. Yes sir.

Mr. Jelke. And you are particularly desirous that Congress, in the Lever bill or any other bill, will pass no law which would in any way impair the police powers of the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. Woodward. Of course we recognize the right of Congress to pass a law that will regulate interstate commerce in reference to these matters, but no law ought to be passed by the Congress of the United States that interferes to any great extent with the police control over this subject in any State.

Mr. Plumley. Can we?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; certainly you can, and you can do it in this bill if it is effective.

Mr. Jelke. In order to obviate that difficulty and secure the end which you desire—that is, the supremacy of the Pennsylvania law—would not that be surely accomplished if the Federal statutes were wiped clean and all laws repealed?

Mr. Woodward. You mean to repeal all of the national laws?

Mr. Jelke. All of the Federal statutes.

Mr. Woodward. As far as we are concerned we can enforce the Pennsylvania laws without reference to your Federal statutes; that is true. I do not speak on the subject of a tax. We are not concerned in that. Speaking from experience, I say that if the enforcement of this law is put in the hands of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, he will be more interested in the collection of the tax than in the enforcement of the other features of it, and that has been shown by the history of the past in reference to the Grout bill. We have experienced difficulty in Pennsylvania in having the United States Government enforce the Grout law where it was not a question of dollars and cents, and I think that will also be the experience in reference to this particular law if the enforcement of it is placed in that bureau. When they get their taxes they are not interested very much further.

The Chairman. What would you recommend?

Mr. Woodward. As I say, the law of Pennsylvania as it now stands is satisfactory to me. Now, so far as I know, there may be some changes necessary, but the only change that I could possibly think of would be in the interest of protecting the consumer, to make a change in the Federal law whereby yellow oleomargarine is going to be taxed whether the color is produced by artificial dyes or otherwise.

Mr. Heflin. Do you not think the coffee people have just as much right to ask for legislation to prevent people from selling Postum, which so resembles coffee?

Mr. Woodward. No.

Mr. Heflin. It is colored the same as coffee, and when it is poured out of the pot or kettle no man can tell the difference by the color, and would it not seem that the coffee people have the same right to prevent the Postum people from making Postum the color of coffee?

Mr. Woodward. There is no necessity for that. Butter is an article that is in general use; it is one of the substance we use every day on our tables.

Mr. Heflin. So is coffee; is it not?

Mr. Woodward. I understand that, but there is no resemblance; Postum does not resemble coffee; nobody would mistake Postum for coffee, because when he looks at it he can at once see the difference.

Mr. Heflin. Well, is that so after it is served on the table?

Mr. Woodward. You can tell by the taste in a moment.

Mr. Heflin. Can you not tell the difference in the taste of butter and oleomargarine?

Mr. Woodward. No sir; you can not; no one can tell, because they are so similar; they simulate each other, at least, oleomargarine simulates butter to such an extent that there is practically no difference except in the color, and we object, so far as Pennsylvania is concerned, to the destruction of the only point in which they do differ.

Mr. Heflin. The testimony yesterday was to the effect that there are various grades of butter; some is white, some has a little color of yellow, and some has a deeper yellow, depending upon the character of the food the cow ate, and the character of the coloring matter used in making the butter, and that a thousand different dairymen might have different shades of yellow.

Mr. Woodward. That is right.

Mr. Heflin. If that is so, what shades do you propose to allow the oleomargarine to have?

Mr. Woodward. No shade.

Mr. Heflin. Then, you think that they should be denied the right to make their stuff attractive for the table, and at the same time require them to brand it and sell it as margarine or oleomargarine?

Mr. Woodward. I say that in order to protect the public; they may be permitted to color it in any old color they please, so long as they do not color it in a way that is intended to deceive the public. Oleomargarine is just as good for food when it is sold white as it is in any other color. It is only a matter of education; the people buy oleomargarine that is yellow because they are fooled thereby, and believe they are getting something which they are not getting, because it looks like butter.

Mr. Heflin. Under the Lever law they would not be fooled, because the package must have a stamp on it.

Mr. Woodward. I do not know about that.

Mr. Heflin. I gather from the letter you read that your chief is opposed to any coloring in oleomargarine, although the ingredients may naturally make it yellow.

Mr. Woodward. That is the Pennsylvania statute.

Mr. Heflin. Then you would require the manufacturer to bleach it, to get the yellow out of it so it could not possibly look like butter?

Mr. Woodward. No, sir. I am informed, and my experience teaches me, that it is not necessary to bleach the ingredients at all. The fact of the matter is that oleomargarine, when they started to produce it, was white, and they have changed it since for the purpose of simulating butter.

Mr. Jelke. A silver-plated spoon looks like a sterling spoon, does it not?

Mr. Woodward. Yes sir.

Mr. Jelke. Would you advocate the passage of a law that would destroy the plating industry?

Mr. Woodward. No, sir; absolutely not; but I would prohibit, if it were possible to do so, a silver-plated spoon from being sold as a sterling spoon.

Mr. Jelke. Does not the law prohibit that now?

Mr. Woodward. It does up to a certain extent, but it does not follow to the ultimate end; that is the difficulty.

Mr. Jelke. Do not the laws prohibit the sale of oleomargarine to the same extent that the laws prohibit the selling of a plated article for a sterling article?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; but there is not likely to be the same confusion, because there are no substances that I know of, no two food products, that so nearly resemble each other as oleomargarine and butter, and yet are used so extensively.

Mr. Jelke. Where are you staying in Washington?

Mr. Woodward. I am staying at the National Hotel.

Mr. Jelke. I suppose you used a spoon at breakfast. Was it a plated spoon or a silver spoon?

Mr. Woodward. I do not know, and it would not concern me; but it would concern me whether I was served with butter or oleomargarine.

Mr. Heflin. Have you read the hearings recently held in connection with the strike at Lawrence, Mass.?

Mr. Woodward. No, sir.

Mr. Heflin. I am interested in somebody else outside of the butter makers and oleomargarine makers.

Mr. Woodward. So are we.

Mr. Heflin. There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of people who cannot buy butter at the present price.

Mr. Woodward. I agree with you.

Mr. Heflin. And a labor leader appeared before this Committee and asked that this product be put in the smallest package possible, because many times the laboring man is not able to buy but ten cents worth for his family.

Mr. Woodward. He can buy that now.

Mr. Heflin. And for that reason the package was made so small in the Lever bill, and we have shortened the name to "margarin" because it can be stamped on the small package. The word "oleomargarine" is so long that it cannot be put on a small package. And besides that, the word "margarin" is the scientific definition for the substances used in making this stuff. Now, what objection would you have to using the name "margarin" instead of "oleomargarine" when it will serve the same purpose and brand this as a distinct food-stuff from butter?

Mr. Woodward. Only this objection: That, as has been stated by Mr. Foust, when you have a name that has been universally adopted and the common people know that name, you had better not change it to something else they do not know unless you want to get into trouble. Now, one other thing. There is no difficulty about people buying oleomargarine to-day; they can buy ten cents' worth if they want to and they can buy an ounce if they want to. This bill would not help them in that respect unless they wanted the oleomargarine to be yellow by artificial coloring.

Mr. Heflin. How about the artificial coloring of butter?

Mr. Woodward. I would be glad if that were abolished, too. But butter is colored to make it look like butter, and oleomargarine is colored to look like butter; the one is done for a proper purpose and the other is not.

Mr. Heflin. The testimony yesterday was that they colored butter in January so it resembled June butter.

Mr. Woodward. They do.

Mr. Heflin. And that was for the purpose of getting June butter prices?

Mr. Woodward. No; to make it a uniform product throughout the year. The price of butter does not depend on its color.

Mr. Heflin. Would you favor allowing the oleomargarine people to use butter and cream in the making of oleomargarine?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; so long as they do not get the yellow color, certainly.

Mr. Heflin. But you do not want it to look yellow?

Mr. Woodward. I do not want that color which will deceive the public. There ought to be some distinguishing mark between oleomargarine and butter, and the only thing we can positively get is color, so let us stick to the color.

Mr. Heflin. If you knew it would be sold as margarin and not as butter, would you object to having it colored yellow?

Mr. Woodward. No; except that I personally would not want it colored, and the same with butter; I do not believe in colored foods, personally.

Mr. Rubey. I called your attention to the law in Pennsylvania, and you stated that the law is enforced and that the violations of that law had been less and less as the years go by.

Mr. Woodward. Pardon me; I said up to two years ago they increased, but since then they have been declining.

Mr. Rubey. Now, I think the strongest point you make is in reference to the law of the Nation as opposed to the law of the State, and in your opinion the passage of the Lever bill would virtually be a repeal of the Pennsylvania law?

Mr. Woodward. Absolutely; and it cannot help but do it; I do not care what construction you put on the Lever bill, it will do that.

Mr. Heflin. Your State statutes could easily be made to conform to the Lever bill?

Mr. Woodward. There is no trouble about that. We will have to submit if you pass this law, only we say this, that the Congress of the United States has no right to usurp the police powers of the State over this food product.

Mr. Haugen. If Congress should pass a law that you should hang your people, you could make your law conform to it?

Mr. Woodward. Yes sir.

Mr. Haugen. But you would not want to do it?

Mr. Woodward. No, sir.

Mr. Plumley. What is there in the Lever law that would destroy the police law and regulation of Pennsylvania?

Mr. Woodward. Why, several things.

Mr. Plumley. I do not ask you in detail, but is it the provision that you read there, that the "manufacturers' original package" would break up your getting hold of it?

Mr. Woodward. Yes, sir; that is very largely it.

Mr. Plumley. Is it not true that by the law of the United States as well as by the Constitution, the police power of a State cannot be interfered with directly by the United States?

Mr. Woodward. Not directly; that is right.

Mr. Plumley. You cannot pass any internal-revenue law which, by virtue of license or anything of that kind, will interfere with the State law when the State law is able to take hold of the thing itself, only while it is passing through in interstate commerce?

Mr. Woodward. It is not only while it passes in but while in the original package and sold inside the State.

Mr. Plumley. And the State is not able, under the interstate commerce provision, to get hold of the thing itself? It is held sacred in its passage, like a bird of flight?

Mr. Woodward. Yes. The trouble is not in the passage into or through the State, but the trouble is, as has been decided by the Supreme Court, that there is not only the right to bring it into the State, but also the right to sell it in the State in the original package.

Mr. Plumley. And that is the part you say disturbs your police power?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; absolutely destroys it.

Mr. Plumley. Now, if it were true that, as a matter of law, the "manufacturers' original package," as that is labeled in the Lever law, so called, did not make that the original package at all, but that the "manufacturers' shipping package" was the unit of commerce, which the United States Supreme Court has passed upon, then it would not interfere with your police power? I am just simply—

Mr. Woodward (interposing). Oh, but it would.

Mr. Plumley. Just follow my question, which is a fair one?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; I catch it.

Mr. Plumley. There is no catch in it at all, but it is a fair one. Take my assumption.

Mr. Woodward. Taking your assumption it would still interfere, for the reason—

Mr. Plumley (interposing). That is what I want to get, your view.

Mr. Woodward. For the reason that when it comes to be sold it will still be sold in the original package, you see—in the package as marked.

Mr. Plumley. But if it is not the original package and not subject to the protection of the interstate-commerce law, then, of course, it would not interfere with your police powers, would it? I simply want to get your view of it and see wherein the differentiation, in your judgment, arises, purely for the purposes of this Committee.

Mr. Woodward. In the first place, I do not want to decide the legal proposition involved in that. I say the only purpose—

Mr. Plumley (interposing). I am not asking you to decide it, and no one would want to say positively, because we do not know. I want to get wherein you consider it interferes with your police power. I want to know, as a member of the Committee, what your belief is.

Mr. Woodward. I believe it just this way, that if the courts would construe that to be the original package, that you have packed that oleomargarine in it, then it is clear—

Mr. Plumley (interposing). There is no question about it.

Mr. Woodward. Whether there will be is another question; that is possibly a debatable question, but the whole purpose in this measure in declaring that the "manufacturers' original package" is to get the courts to do that.

Mr. Plumley. No.

Mr. Woodward. I do not see any other purpose.

Mr. Plumley. Now you are invading the province of the Committee.

Mr. Woodward. Well, that may be.

Mr. Plumley. I would have no fault to find if you were to speak of its effect, but when you attempt to say what the original purpose of the Committee that drew up this bill was, you may be wrong; because you must admit that they know more about the original purpose than you do.

Mr. Woodward. I think so; but I cannot conceive how that language means anything else, or what the purpose would be unless it would be that.

Mr. Plumley. Well, that is a fair argument, but to say that the original purpose of a sub-committee in presenting a bill to this committee was vicious—

Mr. Woodward (interposing). Oh, no.

Mr. Plumley. Would it not be vicious if that was the intent?

Mr. Woodward. I did not so charge. I said that if it had any purpose, that would manifestly be it, to me.

Mr. Plumley. You speak like a gentleman, and I am finding no fault with your expression, but when you come to refer to the purpose you must admit that the framers of the bill must have a clearer conception as to the real purpose than you have.

Mr. Woodward. Yes, sir; and yet when they use language which—

Mr. Plumley (interposing). You can say what the effect is, and that is one thing, but the purpose is another.

Mr. Woodward. But when they use language the effect of which, or the apparent purpose, at least, of which is to make the law such that you cannot control the commodity, then I think we have a right to call the attention of the Committee to that.

Mr. Plumley. You have a right to call our attention to it, and if there is any danger of that being the original package, in the meaning of interstate commerce, then you have raised a strong point against it.

Mr. Woodward. Exactly.

Mr. Plumley. No one can question that. But when in the judgment of the Committee that had it in charge, however erroneous their view might have been, it was not so construed and not so believed, and they base their opinion upon the law as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States—but perhaps mistakenly—that is a fair question of debate.

Mr. Woodward. Well, I was going to say to you just this, that my own judgment as a lawyer is that that will not be the original package; that is my own judgment. But I do say that if the apparent purpose were carried out, then it would seriously interfere.

Mr. Plumley. It would have no purpose except to conform to the law.

Mr. Woodward. Why use that language? Why say anything about the original package?

Mr. Plumley. It was used in order that it might be referred to throughout the rest of the bill, and when you say that was not our purpose I am through.

Mr. Woodward. I do not know whether it was or not.

Mr. Plumley. I think you ought to think so if I tell you.

Mr. Woodward. I am perfectly willing to accept your statement of it.

Mr. Plumley. It seems to me as though some people think that this Committee, sworn to do its duty, has sat down here to frame a law with a vicious purpose.

Mr. Woodward. Well, I assure you I do not want to reflect on the Committee, and I do not know that I have.

Mr. Plumley. Now, for the first time in my life I am presented with that phase of mind that I would sit down, under my oath, and deliberately frame a law with a vicious purpose. You do not want to say that, Mr. Woodward?

Mr. Woodward. Absolutely not; I do not want to reflect on the Committee at all.

Mr. Plumley. Then, when you talk about apparent purposes, recognizing that this is a Committee bill—

Mr. Woodward (interposing). I have referred only to the language as I find it in the bill.

Mr. Plumley. We are entirely open and wholly anxious to hear you discuss all phases of this bill that invade our good judgment or wise belief of what we know about the law, but the moment it is suggested that there was any other purpose than an honest purpose to prevent fraud, either on the consumer or the butter maker, you have invaded the forum of our conscience, over which we stand guard.

Mr. Woodward. Surely; and if I have said anything here in that respect which would be liable to that construction, I assure you, gentlemen, I did not mean to do anything of the kind. My thought was this, that you have a right to judge of the object of a measure by the language that is used.

Mr. Plumley. Well, then, I started, Mr. Woodward, to tell you what our reason for using it was, and you began to doubt it and others began to grin about it, as though we did not know what our purpose was.

Mr. Woodward. Now, to come back to your other proposition; let us leave that for a moment, because I want to answer the other proposition. I have been asked the question whether if the construction of this statute is placed upon the courts, it will receive the construction which you say the Committee believes is the correct construction.

Mr. Plumley. The sub-committee.

Mr. Woodward. If the act is so construed it will seriously interfere with the police powers of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Plumley. I want to know wherein it will interfere.

Mr. Woodward. For this very reason: The Legislature of Pennsylvania has passed a law which says colored oleomargarine shall not be sold. You propose to put it up in packages—in convenient packages which will be handled by the grocer and dealer—these little sealed cartons—and you propose to have those go to the retailers all over the State of Pennsylvania. Now, nobody will be able to tell whether that contains colored oleomargarine or white oleomargarine until the package is broken open. Now, in the ordinary course of sale, the dealer would not break that package open.

Mr. Plumley. He cannot by law.

Mr. Woodward. He could after it ceases to be the subject of interstate commerce.

Mr. Plumley. No; not if we have drawn the law as effectively as we intended. We intended that that shall pass out of the retailer's hands unbroken, and that may make it all the more subject to your criticism. I want you to understand clearly what we intended by the law. We understand that by the terms of that law, the retailer must pass it over his counter with the unbroken taps and the unbroken strip stamp.

Mr. Woodward. You do that by virtue of the tax feature of the law? Is that the idea?

Mr. Plumley. Yes, sir; that is our purpose. I do not say we have an effective law, and I would be glad to have it looked into and see whether we have or not, but when you try to tell us what the purpose was, we know better than you do.

Mr. Haugen. That is true, if in the meantime somebody has not broken the strip stamp. I want to say that every member of this Committee has put forth an honest effort, I believe, and that every one of them has worked conscientiously and honestly and with only one point of view, and that is to make the best bill possible. All of us have not agreed upon these measures—

Mr. Plumley (interposing) Naturally, we might disagree.

Mr. Haugen. And I want to suggest this, that the manufacturer, of course, complies with the law, but he is permitted to color it; he sells a thousand pounds to some one who is willing to violate this law and take a chance; he breaks the packages, the thousand packages, although the strip stamp may have been wound around the packages a thousand times, and he sells it to the retailer and the retailer sells it and the only man you can reach is the man who destroys the stamps.

Mr. Plumley. We believe we have passed a law which does make it a breach of the law if the package is broken before it is passed over.

Mr. Haugen. But you speak of the retail dealer—

Mr. Plumley. I am not saying he would not commit fraud. But I want to say that we have tried to frame a law which would make it a breach of it if it did not leave the retailer's hands with an unbroken stamp.

Mr. Woodward. I have not examined the act in that respect, but I was going to say that if that could be done at all, it must be done by the tax feature entirely and not in connection with the commerce feature.

Mr. Jelke. Mr. Woodward, if in the construction work of this subcommittee it becomes necessary to use certain words, and those words have been defined by the Supreme Court of the United States, can they go to any better authority?

Mr. Woodward. Yes; they can; when they come to use words that are in common use among the people; they can use those words, which would be better than the words of the Supreme Court; if your object is not to fool the people.

Mr. Plumley. You are still doubting our object.

Mr. Woodward. No; I am not doubting. You have declared that is your purpose, so I take it for granted it is your purpose.

Mr. Plumley. We are sworn to make it so.

Mr. Woodward. Yes; and that is the express purpose of your bill.

Mr. Plumley. Our purpose is to make a good law.

Mr. Jelke. You have said that, in your judgment, the original package for the purpose of internal revenue would not be the original package for the purpose of interstate commerce, you have said that, have you not?

Mr. Woodward. Yes, sir.

Mr. Jelke. If that is your judgment, why do you come before this committee and make an argument that is based upon a different interpretation?

Mr. Plumley. He read another man's letter.

Mr. Woodward. Not only that, but I want to say this, just as was said by Mr. Foust in his letter. That the question ought to be removed from all doubt and this committee and Congress, I take it, when they come to legislate on that question, ought to remove all doubt as to the facts.

Mr. Jelke. There would be no doubt if you repealed all of the Federal laws, would there?

Mr. Woodward. I do not understand you. As to what?

Mr. Jelke. As to any of these questions.

Mr. Woodward. Then there would be no doubt, because the matter would be left to the police control of the States, and that is what we want now and about which we want no doubt.

Mr. Farmer. I would like to ask Mr. Woodward whether it is true that the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has rendered decisions on the coloring of oleomargarine, as stated in Commissioner Foust's letter, and, if so, whether he could produce these decisions?

Mr. Woodward. I think I have them with me.

Mr. Flanders. I want to ask the gentleman one question, as a matter of privilege. I confess to the committee that I was one of the gentlemen who smiled, but I did not smile in the way that it has been construed. I smiled because my friend from Pennsylvania, whom I never saw until to-day, was apparently making the same mistake that I unfortunately made yesterday. Now, my question is this. As a lawyer, is it not your opinion that the rule of construction of a statute is this: That the courts do not try to give the intention of the legislative body, but they give it from the statute itself.

Mr. Woodward. That is one of the rules.

Mr. Flanders. And that they do not go back and search into the motives which are peculiarly known to the legislators? It was from that standpoint that I was talking yesterday, and I had no thought of reflecting upon the motives of anyone. I remember distinctly that matter was brought out by Senator Bailey at the time the oleomargarine bill was before the Senate. He said, "If you gentlemen vote for this measure on the theory that it is a taxing measure and you believe it to be so, you cast a constitutional vote; but if you think it to be anything else than a bill to raise revenue, you cast an unconstitutional vote; but I believe the courts will declare it to be constitutional, because they cannot go back of the bill itself and find the motive in your mind." I have been judging statutes for years from the wording of the bills themselves and trying to get the intent of the legislature, but under the rule that you get the intent of the legislature from the wording of the bill itself, you can not go back to get the motives. And my reason for smiling to-day was that Mr. Woodward was falling into the same mistake that I did yesterday.

Mr. Farmer. I think Mr. Woodward has a correction which he desires to make. I think he mentioned the fact that the color question has been passed upon by the appellate courts, and I think he mentioned absolutely the Supreme Court. I would like to ask him whether that is correct, and whether those cases have gone to the Supreme Court?

Mr. Woodward. I think you are in error as to what was said in the letter written by Mr. Foust. I think it was said in that letter that the constitutionality of the act and the question of color had been decided by the Supreme Court and the Superior Court. Now, that may be misleading, and I will say this to the committee and make this correction, that the constitutionality of the act has been passed upon by the Supreme Court, and the color provisions have been passed upon by the Superior Court, and the Supreme Court has refused appeals from that decision, and that is final.

Mr. McLaughlin. On account of your law in Pennsylvania and on account of your experience with the Pennsylvania law that forbids the sale of colored oleomargarine, you may be able to tell us what grade, tint, or shade of color should be forbidden by law.

Mr. Woodward. No; I could not tell you that. That is a matter of judgment for this committee, having in mind the purpose which you have intended, the prevention of the sale of oleomargarine for butter.

Mr. McLaughlin. Would it not be necessary for the committee to adopt some shade, or tint or grade by certain known standards?

Mr. Woodward. That might be necessary as an administrative matter, and which would be determined by an administrative officer.

Mr. McLaughlin. You have had to do with the interpretation and enforcement of a law which contains that provision, and I thought you might be able to give us some help as to what a law of that kind ought to be.

Mr. Woodward. In our State it is a question of fact and not a question of law.

Mr. McLaughlin. You say it shall not be colored to resemble butter?

Mr. Woodward. Yellow butter.

Mr. McLaughlin. Well, now, let us assume, Mr. Woodward, that oleomargarine is made without objection; that is, that these gentlemen who appear for the dairy interests would not object to certain kinds of oleomargarine. Now, even that oleomargarine has a color which has more yellow in it than real butter made from certain breeds of cattle in certain sections of the country at certain times of the year, is not that true?

Mr. Woodward. I take issue of fact there; all butter is yellow in color of some shade of yellow, as far as I know it. I am not a farmer, but as far as it comes to my experience it is all yellow of some shade unless it has been bleached or something of that kind in manufacture, scalded or bleached or something; it is yellow in some shade; even though made in the winter it is not a dead white.

Mr. Haugen. The natural color of oleo is white?

Mr. Woodward. There is no natural color of oleo. It is a manufactured product, and of course the color depends on the ingredients; the whole thing is artificial, therefore you cannot speak of the natural color of anything artificial; but, pardon me, I did not mean to criticize you. I have used the expression adulterate and used it in the way we ordinarily use it, meaning to say that here where there is no deliberate purpose to produce a color in oleomargarine and the ordinary fats are used and are not selected material for that purpose, the color is white or nearly so.

Mr. Haugen. Right in that connection I want to read from Mr. Jelke's statement.

Mr. Jelke. Me or my brother?

Mr. Haugen. I think you accepted his testimony in this case. I will read to you from page 88.

Mr. Heflin. But he subsequently qualified that in that same record.

Mr. Haugen. Well, we will see the qualification. That is on page 88. I want you to listen, and I think we can settle that for all time to come as to the color of oleo. Here is where he was speaking of the tax, he said:

The incentive to produce the colored, which is worth 9 3-4 cents a pound more, has encouraged the manufacturers to use a yellow shade of cottonseed oil, corn oil, and the soy-bean oil, or mustard-seed oil, or some such oil as those in order to produce a yellow color, and to mix therewith some June butter, that is, bought in June and has the natural June shade, and together they mix and make a yellow-tinted product that is as easily sold for butter as the 10 cent tax goods, on which the manufacturer is supposed to pay 10 cents a pound tax. Those are facts. The oils so used are of an inferior quality to the refined oils of a better class that produce a fine, sweet-flavored oleomargarine. The butter dealers and their counsel have been very wisely advised, and they have learned that it is impossible to produce a high-grade oleomargarine by the use of yellow-tinted oils of any character except in a very short space of the year. The natural color of oleomargarine, as the butter people know, and I will leave it to any of them here, of a good quality, is white.

I take it that ought to settle the color for all time. This was a manufacturer of oleomargarine, and he certainly knows what he states.

Mr. Heflin. Now, Mr. Haugen, if they use yellow cream in the making of oleomargarine, would you have them bleach the color? If it should be yellow would you have them bleach it out and make it white?

Mr. Haugen. I would not permit the use of lard or any other thing to adulterate butter any more than we permit the use of water. Why should we prohibit here the use of fat to adulterate butter and pass it as butter, where we do not permit the use of moisture in the excess of 10 per cent.?

Mr. Heflin. You would not allow the oleo people, then, to use butter and cream in the making of oleo?

Mr. Haugen. I would allow them to use a certain amount of cream, if necessary; I do not want to put them out of business. If necessary, allow them to use 10 per cent., as in other countries; that would be very well. And I want to say, in regard to this bill introduced, we are not here to have any particular pride in that bill or any other bill. My contention is that every article should stand on its own legs; let it be sold for oleo and made out of natural ingredients. If it is sold for butter, let it be made out of cream and salt.

Mr. Heflin. Is it not a fact that woolen manufacturers use cotton in the manufacture of woolen goods? And I state it is a fact, and only an expert can tell whether it is wholly wool or whether part cotton and part wool. It is a fact they use flax and cotton in the composition of automobile tires; it is a fact they make mercerized cotton so resembling silk that none but an expert can tell the difference in them. Now, if cotton is used in the manufacture of woolen goods, and wool in the manufacture of cotton goods, and linen in the manufacture of wool, and mercerized cotton with silk, would you say that these people could not use a little butter and cream in the manufacture of a foodstuff that has a distinct place among the class of people who are not able to buy butter?

The Chairman. My colleagues here on this committee are discussing these questions and they will have full opportunity for this when the committee is in executive session.

Mr. Haugen. I fully agree with the chairman that the people who are here should have this time; they should be given the time and we can thrash that out between ourselves later; but I think I ought to be permitted to answer that question.

Mr. Chairman. You will have full time to answer all questions.

Mr. Haugen. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that if he presents the records of the department that will produce the proof here that 5,492 dealers are engaged in the fraudulent sale of cotton and selling 62 per cent., or more than six-eighths of the total product as a counterfeit, counterfeiting wool, or whatever it may be, I will be very glad to join him in an effort to suppress that fraud.

Mr. Jelke. Mr. Haugen has read part of the testimony of Mr. John S. Jelke.

The Chairman. Page 257.

Mr. Jelke. And he modified it and corrected it.

Mr. Haugen. Mr. Chairman, there have been so many modifications here that I have suggested that some of these statements of people who have been modifying their statements that we had better leave those things out.

Mr. Jelke. We have not modified our views.

Mr. Haugen. No; I am speaking of the gentlemen who appeared here before the committee.

Mr. Heflin. Mr. Haugen is too good a lawyer to contend here that the statement he read, made by Mr. Jelke on a former occasion should not be followed by a statement he made afterwards, and I ask that this follow,

Mr. Haugen. Certainly; it may all go in.

When I stated to Mr. Flanders that the John F. Jelke Company were selling white oleomargarine, Mr. Flanders understood that white oleomargarine does not mean a white such as his linen color or a piece of white writing paper; white oleomargarine means white in the trade sense; that is, without artificial color, and plainly appears white when contrasted to yellow. The natural color of the best grades of oleomargarine is of a white color, such as any person would, if asked the question, "What color is this oleomargarine?"

quickly answer, "White." That is, their eye would tell them it was white, having no pronounced shade of yellow color. During certain periods of the year, which Mr. Flanders claims as the succulent months, when the grass is green and plentiful and cows are fed in the pasture, the same effect that produces the yellow cream and butter, produces a more yellow fat in cattle and also in the milk and cream which the oleomargarine manufacturers use in churning. This naturally produces a slight tinge of yellow and is absolutely unavoidable. At the same time, butter is naturally of such a deep yellow color at that time there is a wide difference in the appearance of the two when compared so that it is hardly possible for an intelligent person to call the light colored yellow, when they are looking at the high colored June and October butter. One might say the oleomargarine has a light straw color. The yellow shade of color in oleomargarine that the butter dealers object to is that deep yellow produced by selecting certain yellow fats from cattle and producing an exceptionally high-colored oleo oil, and by selecting a very yellow cottonseed oil, and mixing therewith yellow June butter and possibly adding soya-bean oil, corn oil, or mustard-seed oil. This makes a product that resembles yellow butter. This product, with the high prices prevailing for butter, have enabled retail dealers in oleomargarine to sell a larger quantity during the past year or two than formerly, the high prices for butter forcing the consumer to accept this inferior quality yellow oleomargarine rather than take the white oleomargarine at a less price, showing the effect that color has on the average consumer. The production of that character of goods has been done at the expense of quality, for the yellow fats thus selected and the yellow cottonseed oil are not as sweet nor palatable as the lighter-colored fats and oils, and the June butter, which is carried in cold storage from 6 to 10 or 11 months, does not have the effect of producing a palatable product, but the customer accepts this inferior tasting oleomargarine because of its color rather than take a white oleomargarine, which is of superior quality, thus showing how necessary and essential color is to the proper marketing of oleomargarine to the satisfaction of the consumer.

OLEOMARGARINE AND THE SOUTH.

Much effort has been expended in the cotton growing states to create a sentiment hostile to the National Oleomargarine law, particularly that feature which draws a line between the natural, honest, uncolored product and oleomargarine colored to counterfeit butter. The assertion has been widely circulated that the attempt to curtail the sale of an imitation or counterfeit is an attack upon the cotton industry. A prominent Southern daily newspaper says the oleomargarine law "penalizes" the leading crop of the South. The basis for such statements is the fact that a small amount of cotton seed oil is used in oleomargarine,—especially the cheaper kinds; the higher grades contain little, or none.

W. F. Massey says: "The Southern congressmen have lined up in favor of oleomargarine, because they have a notion that in that way they are favoring the farmers who sell cotton seed, and the oil mills that make the oil."

The Source of the Movement.

The backbone of this Southern propaganda against the oleo law has been, not the farmers or the agricultural leaders, but the cotton seed oil interests. And because the alleged injury to this industry has been enormously exaggerated, (as we shall show later on), suspicion points to the meat packers, who are the oleomargarine manufacturers, as the instigators of the movement. The meat trust, the packers, the oleomargarine manufacturers,—different names for the same group of gentlemen,—are the largest purchasers of cotton seed oil. It is stated that they take about one-third of the annual output of the oil mills. This goes into soap, oleomargarine, lard compounds and substitutes, etc. It naturally follows that the best customer of the cotton seed oil people would have much over them, and that they would willingly do a favor for such a customer.

Now the particular feature of the law which the packers are paying out large sums of money to defeat, is the ten cent tax on colored oleomargarine, and this also happens to be just what the cotton seed oil interests oppose. Hence there are further grounds for the suspicion above noticed. Furthermore, the statements of the oil interests are so exaggerated as to give additional reason for suspecting that they are not acting according to their own intelligence and good judgment, but as the mouthpiece of others.

This is the case of the cotton seed oil interests against the present oleo law, as contained in a letter by the executive committee of the cotton seed crushers' association to Southern newspapers:

"As cotton oil is a large ingredient in the manufacture of oleomargarine, the cotton oil industry is very naturally supporting the movement for the abolition or reduction of this tax, and, through the Interstate Cotton Seed Crushers' Association, are actively bringing all the influence they possess, or can get to bear, on Congress. The dairy interest in the South is insignificant, while the cotton oil interest affects nearly every farmer in the south; the butter interest of the north and west are the sole beneficiaries of the oleomargarine tax, while every consumer in the entire country, every farmer in the south who raises cotton, every oil mill in the south (900 of them) with their employes and laborers, are the sufferers. This is written, not for publication, but to enlist your aid in the cause, by writing emphatic articles in your editorial columns."

The Misrepresentation.

The above statement of the cotton-seed-oil echo of the oleomargarine manufacturers is a gross exaggeration. Note that they say, "This is written not for publication."

(1) It is not true that cotton seed oil is a large ingredient of oleomargarine. It averages only about 11 per cent. The total value of cotton seed oil annually consumed in oleomargarine is approximately $500,000. According to figures of the last fiscal year, only 3 per cent of the oleomargarine manufactured paid the 10 cent tax. Three per cent. of the value of all the cotton seed oil used in oleomargarine is only $15,000. So that the alleged enormous interest of the South is the 10 cent tax on colored oleomargarine shrinks to the insignificant sum of $15,000 per year. In 1908, for each acre planted in cotton, the value of the oil used in oleomargarine was one and one-half cents.

(2). It is erroneous to claim that "The dairy interest in the South is insignificant." W. F. Massey says: "The growing dairy interest of the Southern farmers is a hundred times more important than the amount of cotton seed oil sold." By the 1900 census, the Southern states had three and one-fourth million cows, and this number increased one-third during the next census period. The number of pounds of butter made in these cotton growing states, according to in 1900 census, was 198,000,000. Valued at 27 cents per pound, the dairy industry of the South was worth to the producers 52½ million dollars, making no account of the production of market milk for the large and growing cities.

(3). It is not true that anyone is "a sufferer" because of a ten cent. tax on three per cent. of the output of oleomargarine.

(4). It is not true that "the butter interest of the north and west are the sole beneficiaries of the oleomargarine tax." So far as the tax discourages dishonest traffic in oleo to that extent is the butter interest of the South a "beneficiary" of the tax, along with all other sections of the country.

Results of the False Claims.

Hon. Tait Butler, of North Carolina, says: "The oleomargarine manufacturers did their work well, and, appealing to prejudice, instead of reason or facts, they won the support of the majority of the people of the South."

The editor of the Southern Ruralist, Dr. H. E. Stockbridge, says: "There has not been in a generation a subject on which there has been so generally a misconception, or one concerning which there has been so great and willful misrepresentation."

The editor of The Progressive Farmer says: "Southern daily papers and Southern politics have been completely captured by the cotton seed sophistry."

What Will You do About It?

The South has for several months had two kinds of teachers. The oleomargarine combine, using the cotton seed oil industry as a mouthpiece, has been preaching that the Southern dairy interest are insignificant, although the census statistics show that they are one hundred and forty times more important than the oil that goes into oleomargarine. This same propaganda has been creating a public sentiment against legislation that would protect the dairy industry against the dangers of a fraudulent competition.

On the other hand, the state governments, many individuals, including all the agricultural leaders, the agricultural press, and the federal government, have been expending much time, effort, and large sums of money in developing Southern dairying.

These two lines of leadership are contradictory. If restrictions against counterfeiting butter are obliterated, by so much will the development of dairying be retarded.

Which set of leaders will you follow? Do not let your congressmen misrepresent you; acquaint them with your wishes. Write promptly.

The land in some portions of the cotton belt is exhausted, continual cropping with cotton having depleted the soil, with the result that the number of bales produced per acre is much less than is realized on the more productive farms. Dairying is of great assistance in restoring soil fertility, and increased attention to dairying in the South will have a tendency to increase the fertility of the soil and, by so doing, increase the product even of cotton itself.

Hon. Tait Butler says: "It is short sighted policy for the cotton oil interest to antagonize the best means of developing agriculture for the mere pittance received for marketing less than one per cent. of its oil, to masquerade under false colors in competition with an honest farm product."

Southern Dairy Expressions.

The Executive Committee of the North Carolina State Live Stock and Dairy Association passed the following resolutions:

Whereas, the tax on colored oleomargarine, in the imitation of butter, is for the purpose of protecting the dairyman against the fraudulent sale of this article as butter, and

Whereas, the present tax of $\frac{1}{4}$ c per pound on uncolored oleo works no hardship on the consumers, and

Whereas, the price of butter has not increased in proportion to the price of other food products, and

Whereas, the State and National Departments of Agriculture have and are spending thousands of dollars in the upbuilding of the dairy industry in this state and other Southern States, and Believing that the repeal of the present tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine will stop all progress in the dairy industry and undermine the very foundation of our agricultural system, viz: soil fertility.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we ask the North Carolina members in Congress to use their influence and their votes in retaining the present tax on colored oleomargarine.

In February, 1910, a meeting was held in Atlanta, Ga., to organize a National Cotton and Cotton Products Association for "advancing Southern agriculture." The following resolutions were introduced, having been previously approved by the active cotton growers present:

Resolved, that because of our direct interest in the great cotton industry of the South, we deprecate efforts now being made by the packing house trust to mislead public sentiment relative to the present tax on colored oleomargarine.

Resolved, that the true interests of our section lie in the development of live stock husbandry founded on the home utilization of the by-products of our cotton seed oil mills.

Resolved, that we believe the present tax on colored oleo is a safeguard against fraud, does not interfere with the legitimate sale of a cheap food product, and does not diminish the demand for cotton seed oil.

Therefore, Resolved, that we oppose the repeal of the present law taxing colored oleo which forms only four per cent of the total production of this food product.

The cotton seed oil men immediately opposed these resolutions which they threatened would disrupt the new organization. The mover of the resolutions was urged to withdraw them which he did with the public statement that his action was taken at the request of the cotton seed oil men present to save the Association.

The Agricultural Society of South Carolina at a recent meeting gave much attention to the development of the dairy industry in the coast region. Professor Harper of the State Agricultural College spoke most enthusiastically of the advantages which the soil and climate of that section offer. He advised the farmers to keep their cotton seed meal in South Carolina, because it is the cheapest nitrogenous or muscle-building nutrient for animals that has ever been discovered. The Charlestown, South Carolina, News Courier editorially endorses this proposition, saying that "The opportunity is ripe, and if we can do these things for ourselves, the sooner we cease paying toll to other sections, the better it will be for us."

A prominent Southern farm manager writes me:

"There is a strong sentiment in the cotton growing states in favor of oleomargarine; yet I believe it is largely due to the fact that the manufacturers of this product have over-estimated the benefit that would accrue to the cotton grower through the use of cotton-seed oil as a substitute for butter fat. The people are coming to appreciate the value of cotton-seed oil and in the future it will not be necessary to masquerade under some other name. The dairy interests should be fully protected."

The Staunton, Va., Leader says:

"Dairying should be one of the biggest interests of Augusta County. * * * * We ought to be ashamed to admit to outsiders that it is necessary to ship in from the west a considerable amount of butter, the value for the whole state being placed at five million dollars."

The Ten Cent Tax.

What the dairy industry wants is honest traffic in butter substitutes. It does not shrink from square deal competition. Dishonesty is encouraged by coloring oleomargarine so that it counterfeits butter. Hence the dairy people of the nation favored the present law imposing a tax of ten cents on colored oleo, not for the tax, but for the purpose of placing a handicap on deception.

The dairy industry is willing to concede substantially all of this tax if the object desired can be reached in some other way, as by prohibiting the coloring of oleomargarine beyond its natural tint. The dairy people are not contending for any particular amount of tax, but for the elimination of fraud and the temptation to deceive. They have prepared a bill which reduces the ten cent tax to one cent, but prohibits the coloring of oleomargarine beyond a certain specified tint, which is the normal limit.

Fort Atkinson, Wis.

GEO. M. WHITAKER,
Secretary National Dairy Union.

ADDRESS BEFORE THE RETAIL MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF PENNSYLVANIA, AT JOHNSTOWN, AUGUST 20TH, 1912.

By James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Association: In the brief remarks that I shall make to-day in response to the courteous invitation of your President, I desire to centre your attention on the subject of Cleanliness in Handling Food Products, particularly as it relates to the grocers' business.

It is a common saying that 'cleanliness is next to godliness'. A famous German scientist expressed a similar idea when he said 'soap is the measure of civilization.' The American people have always been proud of the cleanliness of their homes. To-day they are thinking a great deal about sanitation, and especially about sanitation in the production and handling of their food supplies. Women's clubs all over the land are systematically discussing the subject and demanding a betterment of conditions, and every day the newspapers devote columns to it.

Our food laws reflect this condition of public demand, and state after state is enacting sweeping sanitary laws in response to it.

When the buyer thinks much about a trade condition, the wise seller will try to think and act ahead of him.

The kind of goods the grocers handle makes perfect sanitation difficult to maintain; but the general replacement of bulk goods by attractively wrapped package goods has created a condition much more favorable to cleanliness and freedom from contamination. So beautiful are the displays I see in some of your stores that I believe they would make the mouth of a cigar-store Indian water in their presence.

But some of your fellows in the trade are away below average. In my years of journeying over the State, I have seen dried fruits made the favorite resting place of the store-cat; packages of bulk jellies open to the flies; cheese and cheese knives visited by various insects; dirty spit-boxes swarming with flies in their way to open foods; stacks of bread loaves handled by successive buyers and layered with light coats of dust from God only knows where; green groceries stacked on the pavement ready to receive the respects of every passing cur; towels encrusted with the dirt of weeks; perhaps clerks and deliverymen who looked as though they might have never felt a towel; and collars, cuffs, and aprons that had far too long avoided the laundryman.

It would be a grave injustice to imply that these conditions are the rule; but you know, as well as I, that some of them exist where there is no good excuse for them, and where a fair measure of attention would cause them to disappear.

Should not every grocer keep clean the floor of his store-room and, in so doing, use means to prevent floor-dust from getting into his food supplies?

Is there any good reason for having a dirty spittoon in any grocery?

Why should not bulk goods, especially such as are directly consumed, be kept under covers such as shall protect them from dust, flies and the handling of numerous customers?

Why should not the premises be kept clean so as to avoid the breeding of flies, and the number of these filth-carrying insects be kept down?

Why, with wholesale houses in nearly every town, should stale, shelf-worn goods be carried, with all the risk of insect attack and other spoilage?

Why should not clean linen and clean hands be rigidly exacted requirements of every food handler in the grocery store?

Why shouldn't every grocery store provide washing conveniences, soap, and clean towels to encourage the personal cleanliness of its salesmen?

These, and many other similar questions your customers are asking.

I want to say, however, that the sanitary conditions of the grocery have greatly improved in recent years. The general store with its cracker-barrel seats and its box of saturated saw-dust centrally placed as the target for the congregated tobacco-chewers, has almost vanished from the land; and many better things have come in its place. The grocerymen of Pennsylvania deserve credit for the great improvement they have made. My attitude, in addressing you, is one of sincere desire that all may do as many have done, and by cordial co-operation with a sincere desire to please and serve well their customers, shall remedy sanitary evils where they exist, without any intervention by numerous prosecutions, which the laws require me to make where the food handlers fail themselves to remedy the evils complained of.

Now my friends let me say to you that our department wants you to co-operate with it and it sincerely desires to co-operate with you in all that stands for the best interest of the community and the State at large, in other words, to meet you half way on an equitable basis. Our only hope, as I have already stated, is to be absolutely fair in all matters coming before us for consideration and adjustment, contending only and solely for simple justice between dealer and consumer and for protection of the health and lives of the people of this Commonwealth. This, and this only is our aim.

In closing I desire to most sincerely express the hope that our relations during the coming year will be most cordial, as I certainly anticipate they will be. Let us work together to better conditions not only for the consumers, but for yourselves, for I am more than sure that a broad-minded commercial spirit and a wholesome co-operation with our department will be mutually helpful.

FOOD SANITATION AS APPLIED TO ICE CREAM MANUFACTURING.

Delivered before the State Convention of Ice Cream Manufacturers of Pennsylvania, by Dr. F. T. Aschman, Chemist to the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President and Gentlemen: Our mutual friend, Mr. Rieck, must have a very persuading personality, and one, too, that can exert itself even at a distance, for a couple of weeks ago he called me up on the 'phone and exacted a promise from me to talk to you. He did not say for me to give you a talking to, but he did say for me to do the next thing to it, that is, for me to give you some fatherly advice. And so I rashly agreed. In thinking the matter over, it seemed as if a few words on food sanitation, as applied to ice-cream, might be appropriate.

The regulation of the food supply in this country really began but a short thirty years ago. In 1882 Massachusetts began to regulate the composition of milk and the sale of adulterated butter. Of course, there was some desultory legislation, especially in the cities, corrective in character, prior to that time; and in some states it became necessary to protect and build up the dairy interests. But the work really began in a systematic state-wide manner in 1882. From that time to the present day, food regulation has been a story of rapid progress. It passed through the various stages of mere regulation to the development of standards of composition and specifications for branding and labeling. This work which was at first corrective rather than restrictive, thus became largely regulative. And so rapid has been our progress that while the necessity for suppressing mere frauds in food products has fortunately been very much diminished, we are now able to turn our attention more and more to the broader field of food sanitation. In other words, food adulteration has become not only a question of fraud to be suppressed by police methods; it is rapidly becoming a problem for the food sanitarian. The time is quickly approaching when the greatest opportunity for doing good will be found, not in prosecuting dealers who handle adulterated goods or goods not up to a certain legal standard, but in regulating the manufacture and distribution in such a manner as to bring them in conformity with our modern ideas of food sanitation and our knowledge of bacteriology.

Do not misunderstand me. It will probably always be necessary to prevent the food fraud from disposing of his low-standard and doped wares, but the time is rapidly coming when we shall realize that while ice cream, for instance, shall be true to name, shall contain at least a given amount of butter-fat and not over a certain amount of gelatin, it is infinitely more important that it shall be clean and made in proper sanitary surroundings and by people in good health.

The more recent national food laws and the laws of the various states have taken recognition of this fact. Our own Pennsylvania law says upon this point (Section 3, clause 6): "Food shall be deemed to be adulterated if it consists of an animal or vegetable substance produced, stored, transported or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased, contaminated or unwholesome." This would of course cover ice cream, even though we have a special ice cream act regulating its composition.

Ice cream is particularly liable to contamination. We all know, often to our sorrow, that milk and cream, and as a necessary consequence, ice cream, are among the best natural seed-beds for the growth of bacteria. Freezing does not kill most of these germs, but only retards their growth. And science teaches us that bacteria swarm everywhere, so that we might well wonder how the human race has survived as long as it has. I heard a talk the other evening by the humorist, Mr. Gillilan, and he got off a little poem that fits right in here, so I am going to recite it to you. He claimed it is the shortest poem on record, and we cannot dispute that fact. It has the rather ponderous title of:

"The Antiquity of the Microbe,"

Had'm.

Yes, the microbe is omni-present, and our existence is a continual struggle with it. And science also teaches that many of the most dreaded diseases are propagated by means of these minute organisms. So the time is coming when "pure food" will mean "clean food" as well as "standard food," and when the enforcement of the laws of sanitation will be considered at least as important as the punishing of frauds and sophistications.

We have sanitary inspectors for the benefit of the operative. His work-room must be properly lighted and ventilated; the gears of the machine he operates must be protected by guards; the dust and fumes he makes at his work must be removed by suction. This is right. The health and life of these employees are too sacred and too valuable to neglect. But on the other hand, has not the consumer some rights also? Is it not high time that the public shall be protected against unclean and unsanitary food products? Shall we not demand that our law, that that section of our laws which requires that food products shall be kept free from all contamination must be enforced with a firmness equal to that with which the other provisions are insisted upon? It is true, we have in this State and especially in this city, moved along this line, inasmuch as much work has been done in requiring dealers in fruit, meat, fish and other food products protect their wares from contamination by flies and other vermin. But should we not even go further still and require a certificate of health from every operative who has anything to do with the handling of food products during the process of manufacture or distribution? Is it asking too much to say to the person applying for employment in your ice cream factory: "Show me your certificate of good health"? Shall we continue to unknowingly employ persons suffering perhaps from tuberculosis, some social disease or any disease known to be disseminated by bacteria? Must we not insist that our employees be sound and wholesome; that they are trained in the ways of cleanliness; and that they shall appreciate the necessity of soap and water as cleansing agents?

Of course we cannot expect all this unless we set a good example. The day is fast coming when all public preparation of food products in cellars or under-ground premises, even cooking, will be prohibited by law. Such underground places are usually unwholesome and ill-ventilated. Then we must keep our premises clean. This means not merely that the floors be washed out from time to time, but also that the walls and ceilings may be scrubbed down and that proper toilet facilities be provided, with tight doors, absolutely separated from the work-room, with insistence upon personal cleanliness. I believe some day some one of you will be advertising "certified ice cream," just as now we have certified milk and cream, kept by proper and clean handling within a certain low bacterial count per cubic centimeter. The manufacturer who will put such a certified, pure and guaranteed clean ice cream on the market, is going to do a land-office business. Of course, he is not going to be the one who follows a practice which, I am told, is quite prevalent among ice cream men. I have reference to the practice of having the delivery wagons gather up the often melted ice cream left over from the last delivery, returning it to the factory, mixing it with a new batch and working it in and freezing it for sale. Such a practice is not good economy, and can but lead to an excessive bacterial count and perhaps to cases of ptomaine or tyrotoxin poisoning. I heard of a lady the other day who said she would never again eat ice cream at a hotel or restaurant. When asked for the reason, she explained that while at Atlantic City during the rush season, she went to dinner early at the hotel where she was stopping, and had ice cream for desert. In going out of the dining-room, she happened to get a glimpse of that part of the kitchen where they were dishing out the ice cream. Imagine her feelings when she saw that they were scraping the remains of what ice cream was returned from the tables back into the freezer, stirring it in and dishing it out again. But let me tell you, this practice was no worse than the one in vogue (if true) of re-working the often highly objectionable remainders from your customers back into new deliveries.

Well, gentlemen, I think I have said enough to comply with Mr. Rieck's request for a few words of fatherly advice; and so I close by thanking you for your kind attention.

THE DEVELOPMENT AND NEEDS OF THE ICE CREAM INDUSTRY.

Address by James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, before the Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers of Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. President and Gentlemen: It affords me much pleasure to address your Association on this occasion. I am one of those hard-headed men who believe that the banner of Progress is carried by many groups of men in this great land who are not enrolled as such in any single one of those great political armies that are now battling for the exclusive right to march under that beautiful banner. I am convinced that the ice cream makers of America must have had their eyes fixed upon and their feet hastening after this banner. For I recently read somewhere, that you have increased the manufacture and sale of ice cream in America from 55 million gallons in 1906, to 120 million gallons in 1911; that is, you have more than doubled the volume of your business during a brief period in which the population increased only five or six per cent. What was once a rare delicacy has, through your enterprise, become an every-day dainty. The people wanted it, or you couldn't have found a market; but you made it possible for the people easily to get what they wanted; and I imagine that they have not yet had all they desire.

This great volume of new business has been done only by the turning into a new channel of tremendous quantities of raw material, once used for other purposes. The past six years have not witnessed such an increase in milk production as would be needful to supply the cream for your product and, at the same time, to furnish the material required by the increasing demand for milk for household use and for making butter and cheese.

I want to make this statement emphatic. On January 1st, of this year, Pennsylvania had exactly as many thousand dairy cows as she had in 1899; yet Pennsylvania's population has increased by more than one-sixth; your ice cream product has more than doubled, if you have kept pace with the rest of the United States, and the cheese consumption also has greatly increased. No doubt the efforts toward the improvement of dairy stock has somewhat increased the average yield per cow, but the gain in supply has certainly not kept pace with the increase in demand.

You are vitally interested in this matter. It lies at the foundation of the business you have so vigorously built up. I want, therefore, to say to you that your interests are closely linked with those of the dairy farmer, and that it will be good business for you to join your efforts with his in seeking the way out of the corner into which he is getting penned up.

He is confronted by increased cost of feed, higher wages demanded by labor that is yearly more difficult to hire, increased regulation for the protection of the public health. The State, through various agencies, is trying to help him meet his new problems because his industry is essential to the highest fertility of the land and affects the food supply of the entire people. Your fortune, as much as his, rests upon the success of the work done by the State Department of Agriculture, the State Agricultural Experiment Station, and the School of Agriculture of the State College for the improvement of the dairy industry, and these State agencies for the dairyman's welfare should have your close interest and live support in every move they make to improve the basic dairy industry.

Every gain he makes in the feed grown per acre helps you. Every improvement in the quality of his herd, helps you. Every sacrifice he makes of his convenience under regulations for the protection of the public health, is for others more than for himself. Encourage him and those who are trying to help him to improve his methods. See to it that he is not a loser, out of proportion to all others, when he sacrifices his cows condemned by the tuberculin test.

One result of the decrease in milk supply has been the tendency to cut down the fat richness of your product and to use other materials for its manufacture.

The wares sold as ice cream and under other, similar names show a much greater variety of ingredients than was known a quarter of a century ago. The results are so various that many thoughtful buyers are coming to believe that there should be differences in name for these distinct products. An example of the possibilities came under my observation a few years ago, when I was invited to share a banquet in which nearly every article was in part composed of a cottonseed product. In the list of such foods was a so-called ice cream whose fat was wholly supplied by cotton-seed oil. You know, even better than I do, how much easier it has become to introduce such fats in place of butter-fat, since the advent of the homogenizer.

It is not, however, chiefly to the question of composition that I wish to direct your attention at this time, but to that of sanitary production.

Ice cream is regarded by the consumer as a dainty, and it should be in all respects what that name indicates—made from clean, sound materials, in a clean, sweet factory, with bright, sweet utensils and machinery, packed in thoroughly cleansed containers, and kept, shipped and handled in such manner as to exclude all contamination. I am confident that most of you agree with me in this, and that you are doing your best to live up to this ideal. But, as also you know, there are many in the trade who have no such ideal, who have no regard for the health and taste of the buyer, or are utterly ignorant upon the subject. Any example of this kind simply raises queer questions about all factory ice cream, and causes a flattening of public desire.

I want to get at the men who make ice cream in dirty cellars and back shops; who make 'snow balls' and the like from skim-milk that was never protected from flies; who vend with filthy hands, street-dust-peppered hokey-pokey to our children at the school-house and on the street corners; who repack the leavings of the circus-booth and the festival stand; and who employ factory-men and salesmen affected with loathsome and contagious diseases, or who expose their materials to disease contamination.

To stop these abuses, I believe that clean cut sanitary regulations vigorously enforced will be necessary. With such enforcement, I believe we can cut off, in great measure, these bad practices, and compel these street vendors to keep themselves and their wares clean, and either to make their ice cream in a clean way or buy it from those who do.

I state the problem to you with what I believe to be the best way of dealing with it, and I desire that you give it your careful consideration and suggestion.

IMPROVED SANITARY CONDITIONS IN BAKERIES.

The Bakers' Helper is the name of an up-to-date monthly which the Bulletin hopes to welcome to its table regularly hereafter, an inspection of the September number showing that it is a very complete repository of interesting facts concerning a business which has undergone a remarkable expansion in this country during the last few years. This publication is prepared with great care and its broad pages ought to be indispensable to all bakers.

We have likewise received an interesting letter from Mr. H. R. Clissold, editor of the Bakers' Helper, concerning a proposed "Sanitary Standard for Bakeries," which was acted upon at the recent Louisville meeting of the National Association of Master Bakers. In the course of his letter Editor Clissold says:

"Many of those working for the best possible conditions in food making are not aware of what is going on in the bakery industry along this line. The United States census of 1910 reports the value of our bread and other bakery products at the great sum of $400,000,000 per year, and practically all consumed here. This fact emphasizes to every thoughtful person the importance of sanitary conditions in bakeries.

"During the past quarter century there has been enormous improvement in bakery building, in sanitary analysis and care of raw materials, in methods of making and handling of bakery products, and interesting the public in them, and at the present time the great bulk of these products is made under conditions that are rapidly approaching the ideal. True, there are still many bakeries of the other kind—places which are a reproach and a hindrance to the industry; but you will be glad to know that our leaders are alive to the necessity of improvement, and are pressing it as fast as possible."

After referring to the probable action of the National Association—the letter was written before the meeting—Mr. Clissold adds in conclusion:

"There is a deepening conviction on the part of bakers that a great increase in the sales of bakery goods will follow improved sanitary conditions in bakeries, and general knowledge of these conditions; and while you and they may not have the same initial motive in the campaign for betterment, there is every reason for co-operation and mutual helpfulness in an effort, the success of which will mean so much to the health and comfort of our people."

PROSECUTIONS ORDERED DURING AUGUST.

During the month of August, 1912, a total of 170 prosecutions were ordered by Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust. These were for various violations of the acts of the Commonwealth regulating the manufacture and sale of the several food products mentioned below. It is not the desire of the Dairy and Food Bureau to prosecute anybody who shows a decent respect for law. Those who endanger the lives or the health of their patrons by the sale of impure or adulterated products must take the consequences. The laws exist for the protection of the people and must be enforced. Many offenders are guilty of carelessness rather than of a wanton desire to do wrong, but the law takes no account of motives.

Of the total number of prosecutions no less than 122 were brought under the cream and milk act. Of these twenty-three were for the sale of cream low in butter fat; one of milk preserved with boracic acid; three of milk preserved with formaldehyde; three of watered milk; five of milk low in solids and watered; thirteen low in fat and solids and partially skimmed; seventeen low in fats and solids and skimmed; twenty-seven low in fats and solids; thirty-one low in fats and solids and watered.

The record of a single month briefly recorded above furnishes the best possible evidence of the value of the act of Assembly under which the prosecutions were brought. As the readers of the Bulletin know, milk is the one essential food of humanity at the beginning of its career. An increasing number of infants are brought up on the bottle. This fact increases the necessity for pure milk and justifies the utmost vigilance and severity in the enforcement of the law. The mere recital of the causes of prosecution demonstrates that the State contains men who are willing to adulterate the milk they sell that their profits may be increased.

The prosecutions noted above were instituted in the counties of Allegheny, Beaver, Blair, Bradford, Bucks, Cambria, Chester, Clarion, Columbia, Crawford, Erie, Franklin, Lackawanna, Lancaster, Lawrence, Luzerne, McKean, Mercer, Monroe, Montgomery, Susquehanna and Westmoreland.

Under the general pure food act twenty prosecutions were ordered. These suits were instituted in the counties of Adams, Allegheny, Blair, Cambria, Clearfield, Dauphin, Lackawanna, Lawrence, Luzerne, Washington and Wyoming. One was for the sale of breakfast bacon that was decomposed, diseased, wormy and unwholesome; three of fruit (berries of various kinds) decomposed, contaminated by flies, unwholesome, unfit for food; one of olive oil, adulterated with cotton seed oil; one of cucumber relish sweetened with saccharin; one of dried apricots containing undeclared sulphur dioxide; three of dried peaches containing undeclared sulphur dioxide; two of tomato catsup sweetened with saccharin; eight of tomato catsup containing more than one-tenth of one per cent. of sodium benzoate.

Seventeen prosecutions were ordered under the ice cream act. Of these one was of chocolate cream low in butter-fat and sixteen of vanilla cream low in butter-fat. The cases will be tried in the courts of Cambria, Chester, Luzerne, Lycoming, Montgomery, Washington and Westmoreland counties.

In the counties of Allegheny, Jefferson, Lawrence, Philadelphia and Westmoreland, nine prosecutions have been ordered for violation of the non-alcoholic drinks act. One of these was for the sale of raspberry pop sweetened with saccharin; two of strawberry pop misbranded, artificially colored and flavored; one of orange soda artificially colored and flavored; four of birch beer sweetened with saccharin, and one of marrowfood sweetened with saccharin.

One prosecution was ordered in Philadelphia county for the sale of strawberry syrup sweetened with saccharin, and one in Westmoreland county for the sale of cider vinegar that had been watered.

During the month of July the Bureau ordered 148 prosecutions for violations of the dairy and food laws. The August record shows an increase of 22. Whenever dealers of whatever kind take special pains to obey the law the number of prosecutions will become negligible.

SELLING EGGS IN NEW YORK CITY.

The following taken from the New York Health Bulletin of a recent issue gives some interesting facts regarding the sale of eggs in that city.

The business of selling eggs in the shell and when canned, frozen or dried is one which of late years has required increasing supervision on the part of the public authorities. Eggs in a certain state of decomposition, while unfit for food still have a certain value for manufacturing purposes particularly in connection with the tanning of leather. There are many gradations between the perfectly fresh egg and that which is no longer fit for human food. In connection with the several processes of breaking out eggs to be sold in liquid or dried form there is opportunity for use by unscrupulous dealers of eggs which cannot be sold in the shell for human consumption. On May 18, 1910, the Board of Health adopted a new section of the sanitary code, providing that no person may "break out" eggs for sale or to be dried, frozen or canned or used in any other manner, and that no eggs broken from the shell be sold in the City of New York without a permit from the Board of Health. A further section provided that no person shall receive, keep or sell for food or to be used in food any canned, frozen or dried eggs which are adulterated or to which has been added any poisonous ingredient or antiseptic or foreign substance not evident and not known to the purchaser or which shall contain filthy, decomposed or putrid animal matter.

PUTTING BAD EGGS OUT OF BUSINESS.

Dr. William P. Cutler, Commissioner of the Missouri Department of Pure Food and Drug Inspection, St. Louis, Mo., has started another active campaign to raise the standard of eggs in Missouri and to put a stop to the practice of marketing tainted eggs. Circulars by the thousands have been sent to the farmers and shippers throughout the state, calling attention to the laws in regard to the selling of stale or tainted eggs, and decomposed, tainted or diseased poultry or other animals, and warns the farmers and marketers that they are equally as liable to prosecution for marketing or selling eggs that are unfit for food as the dealer. Health officers and inspectors in all parts of the State have been instructed to see that the laws in this regard are enforced and that all violators are prosecuted.

A number of shipments of spots and tainted eggs have been seized and condemned and several local commission firms are being watched very closely by the authorities, as it is suspected that they are doing a regular business in the prohibited eggs. One firm in particular is known to have worked up quite a trade in these eggs and is selling them to the cheap baker trade, as well as working them off quietly mixed with good eggs. This offender while it is known that he is guilty, has so far succeeded in "hiding his tracks" so effectively that the officers are not yet able to bring enough proof to convict him. They are determined, however, and unless he gives up his illegal practice they are confident of being able to convict him in the near future.

EGG PRODUCTION VARIES.

The production of eggs varies considerably from month to month, remarks the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal. A record made from a large number of flocks in the last several years covering various portions of the United States shows that for every 1,000 eggs produced in a year approximately 66 are laid in January, 71 in February, 124 in March, 134 in April, 133 in May, 107 in June, 96 in July, 86 in August, 62 in September, 42 in October, 31 in November and 48 in December. A good laying hen ought to produce 200 eggs a year, but the average run of hens do not produce much, if any more than 100 a year.

For every 1,000 eggs marketed (based upon receipts in New York, St. Louis and Milwaukee in the last ten years) approximately 33 are marketed in January, 47 in February, 128 in March, 168 in April, 153 in May, 119 in June, 87 in July, 76 in August, 64 in September, 53 in October, 39 in November and 33 in December. If we let the sum of the monthly index of prices of fresh eggs at twelve cities (1902-1911) for the year be represented by 100 the index price will be approximately 105 for January, 89 for February, 71 for March, 66 for April, 65 for May, 64 for June, 67 for July, 75 for August, 84 for September, 94 for October, 107 for November and 113 for December.

Letting 100 represent the price paid to farmers of the United States when prices were lowest, the average on the first day of each month in the last three year was 180 on January 1, 153 on February 1, 118 on March 1, 100 on April 1, 102 on May 1, 102 on June 1, 101 on July 1, 104 on September 1, 104 on October 1, 146 on November 1 and 171 on December 1.

MIND THE LITTLE THINGS.

A characteristic of successful grocers, says the Grocers' Magazine, as well as of successful business men in all lines, is the close attention they pay to inquiries and their correspondence.

On the contrary the men who do not amount to very much in the grocery business, and doubtless, in other lines as well, are very neglectful of inquiries sent them, as well as neglectful of the small details of their business generally.

Neglect of little things is probably responsible for very many failures.

It gives the indifferent men anything but a good name with those who try to correspond with them. Nothing is so cheap as postage stamps, and if those who let little matters accumulate would keep things cleaned up as they go along they would not only enhance their reputation, if they have any, as business men, but would get along much smoother and easier with those with whom they do business. As has been often said the successful grocer is a good business man. He everlastingly tends to the little things as they come along, as well as the large things. It was a grocer of this type who was recently made president of a newly organized trust company the other day with the understanding that, as the institution prospered, he is to receive what, to most men, would be an extraordinary salary.

Keep the little things attended to and out of the way, and the big ones will not be difficult.

A NEW PEDDLER.

A new type of peddler has made his appearance in some of the larger eastern cities, says the Grocers' Magazine. He is not in any way to be confounded with the old type of peddler who bought a ten dollar horse and a cheap wagon, and went through the streets or from door to door selling such goods as he could. The new peddler has a fine looking wagon, handsomely painted. The horse is a good one and well groomed. Even the harness shines and is kept in first rate condition. The man and his helper are both of neat appearance. They buy the best quality of fruits and vegetables, visit the prosperous residence sections, taking a couple nice baskets of grapes, for instance, or other fruit right to the door of the customer. The fruits exhibited are so nicely arranged and so appetizing that they seldom fail to make a sale. They get good prices, better prices than the grocer, and they often carry better stuff than the grocer. It is no wonder that these men, who are natural born salesmen and know how to do business, raise havoc with the trade of the grocers, especially those who depend upon an order boy going around with the mere statement that the store has some Concord grapes, some very fair pie apples, and so forth. It is human nature for the woman to buy what is attractively exhibited and the order boy's statement that the store has some apples cuts very little figure in competition with a nice basket of apples, all highly polished, brought to the woman's back door by the new peddler.

The latter is pursuing modern, up-to-date merchandising methods, and the grocer who wants to meet that style of competition must meet it by having an equally enterprising salesman call with his samples at the homes of his customers, and, if possible, before the other fellow gets there.

It would be a fine thing for the grocers if there were greater restrictions on peddling, but no method of higher license will interfere with the business of the new peddler. He is up to the times. It seems hard to say so, but he is a better merchant than the grocer. At least in some cases he carries better goods and gets better prices. These facts, together with his ability as a salesman, stamp him as a better merchant.

Out in the county old-fashioned peddling methods may still prevail, but the new peddler is making headway in the cities and by enterprise, and not by short weights and tricky methods.

SOMETHING ABOUT FLIES.

The following facts are taken from an article appearing in a recent issue of the Grocers' Review.

Flies are a dangerous nuisance. They carry disease. There are many kinds of flies, but it is the ordinary house fly that especially concerns us.

All flies are dangerous. House flies are especially so, because they are so numerous and because they come in contact with people and foods.

Flies lay eggs. A single female fly lays an average of one hundred and twenty eggs at a time. Four deposits of eggs may be made by one fly. Under favorable conditions the eggs become flies in about ten days time. It takes about ten days more before these flies also lay eggs.

Flies will breed in almost any rotting or fermenting matter. All observers agree, however, that flies prefer horse manure. But they will breed in any kind of dung, whether from horses, cows, pigs or human beings.

In cities flies generally breed in stables. They breed not only in manure, but also in decaying grains, in brewery waste, in decaying vegetables or fruit, in waste cotton or woolen garments, in sacking or paper, when such materials are kept moist and at the proper temperature, especially when mixed with ashes or waste. A house fly's egg is about one twentieth of an inch in length. Under favorable conditions it will hatch a maggot in eight to ten hours. The maggot which comes from the egg moves about in the manure or other material in which it is hatched for several days and undergoes some changes. Usually in about a week it becomes a fly.

Let us suppose that on April 15 a female fly lays 130 eggs, that the sex all become flies, that half are female, which in turn breed at the same rate, about every twenty days, that none are killed we would have the following figures:

|---------------------|-------------------|
| April 15, | 1 |
| May 1, | 120 |
| May 28, | 7,200 |
| June 20, | 432,000 |
| July 10, | 25,920,000 |
| July 29, | 1,555,200,000 |
| August 18, | 93,312,000,000 |
| September 10, | 5,598,720,000,000 |

From this we see that if an adult female fly can be destroyed before she lays her eggs, we have got rid not only of that fly, but all of her vast possible offspring.

In general, flies rest at night, but during daylight they never seem to show fatigue—often flying almost continuously. They prefer shade to sunlight and so prefer the inside of the house if not too dark.

Flies do not travel far from their food unless transported in cars or other vehicles. They cannot eat solid food. Such food they moisten before eating. They prefer semi-liquid food. They seem to have little choice as to whether food has been freshly prepared in the cleanest kitchen or whether it is in the garbage can, or in unmentionable filth.

The house fly carries the germs of disease on its legs and feet and in its alimentary canal. Actual experiments with many kinds of germs prove this. Flies may infect food with such disease germs and may in this way affect human beings, and may also infect each other.

Flies spread typhoid fever. Typhoid fever is a germ disease. It comes from the introduction of the typhoid germ into the system. This is done in three ways—by the fingers, by foods and drinks, and by flies.

These typhoid germs may live under favorable conditions in soil or on toweling for many days after pollution.

It has been shown that the typhoid germs live in butter several months and in milk from twenty to thirty days. It must not be understood that all typhoid cases come from flies. The greater number come from polluted water and milk, but cases coming from flies are numerous. If a fly gets in milk the germs left by the fly will increase very rapidly at the ordinary temperature of the room in summer.

Besides typhoid, flies are the carriers of germs which cause dysentery and diarrhoea of infants—cholera infantum.

Increased prevalence of summer diarrhoea in certain localities has frequently been traced to flies.

Flies feed on sputum from persons suffering from consumption and excrete the germs which cause that disease. Flies like to feed around the eyes of sleeping children, and in so doing may cause ophthalmia, a serious eye disease.

Flies carry disease germs from privies, pig pens, stables and garbage cans. From these places and receptacles they are attracted by the odor of cooking at meal time and fly into the kitchen and dining room and alight and walk on our food. Experiments show that the number of disease germs on a single fly may amount to over 6,000,000.

Flies must be kept from entering dwellings and for the protection of the house all windows and doors must be screened. Foods not on ice—such as fruit, bread, cake, pie, etc., should be kept in a screened safe, closet or box. Tables should not be kept continuously set, as they are in some boarding houses. It is best to put things away and set the table at meal time only.

Flies have many natural enemies but these cannot be relied upon to exterminate them. There are many devices for catching and destroying them.

To prevent the propagation of flies all their breeding places must be found and all rotting material and filth must be removed, and disinfected. People should not throw the household waste and garbage around the back door or into the yard, but should put all such waste that will rot into a covered galvanized iron can.

Garbage should not be mixed with ashes.

Stable manure must not be permitted to accumulate on premises, but should be removed daily from the stable or kept in covered pits or bins. These pits should be screened and the manure should be disinfected.

COW TESTING MAKES PROFITABLE DAIRYING.

That cow testing work represents one of the best and easiest ways of making dairying more profitable and desirable is the conclusion reached by the Nebraska Experiment Station in Bulletin 129, giving the results of one year's work of the Douglass County Cow Testing Association. Twenty-one herds, comprising some 435 cows, were entered. The ten most profitable cows gave during the year a product of $1,032.8 more than the value of the feed consumed. The ten least profitable cows returned in all only $57.82 more than the value of their food, and when the other items of expense are considered, these cows caused their owners a decided loss. The best cow in the lot gave $4.17 for every dollar's worth of feed consumed, while the poorest gave only 55 cents for each dollar's worth of feed.

An interesting feature of the work was the demonstration of the superiority of the cows of the dairy type, with long periods of lactation. Beef-cows and dual purpose cows will often do well after freshening. In the above test a Short-horn herd did as well as the average of the others for a while. But a few months later practically every cow in the Short-horn herd had dried up while most of the cows of dairy breeding were still in good flow of milk.

It is estimated that the production of the average herd belonging to members of this association was raised at least fifty pounds of butter fat per cow, and that over eighteen silos were constructed in the community as a direct result of the first year's work of this association.

The author of the bulletin says: "It seems hard to understand just why so many farmers have been slow to adopt a system of keeping records and testing the milk sufficiently often to enable them to discover and to weed out of their herds the cow that generally consumes as much feed as any cow in the herd but produces only enough butter fat to pay for a fraction of the feed consumed."

The production of the five best herds was 8,263 pounds of milk per cow. The production of the five poorest herds averaged 5,444 pounds of milk per cow per year. The product of the better herds was 50 per cent. more than the product of the poorer ones, while the difference in the expense of keeping them was trivial. If it cost $120 per year to keep a cow producing 4,000 quarts of milk the cost per quart is three cents. If it costs ten dollars less to keep a cow producing 2,700 quarts of milk the cost is four cents per quart.

WHY FARM EGGS ARE POOR.

Walter Jack has the following to say on the above subject in a recent issue of the Egg Reporter:

"Why is it that the quality of eggs is so universally inferior in the city markets?

"The dealer shuffles the blame off on the cold storage man, or the commission man, and too often the real one to be blamed goes off scot free.

"The farmer with his lax methods of producing eggs, is doing more to ruin the reputation of the product than anyone else. I am a farmer and I know whereof I speak. I am not writing this to knock the farmer, but for the purpose of getting at real facts and if possible to help solve the stale egg problem.

"The farmer is careless in his methods of production and in keeping his eggs. The greatest faults that can be charged against him are his careless and lax methods in gathering eggs. Many farmers let their hens lay in boxes, barrels and horse mangers, haymows and in rubbish and weeds about the buildings. They do not gather the eggs until they need them for cooking, or when they want to lay in a gallon of kerosene or a few pounds of sugar. The housewife goes out, looks in all the places where there is a possibility of there having been a hen's nest. The good, fresh eggs are used in her baking, and the discolored ones and the ones that are doubtful go to the country merchant. In making her rounds there are possibly half a dozen hens that she shoos off their nests. She thinks their eggs are still all right for the hens were not sitting on the eggs the last time she made her rounds, and these, instead of being kept for home use, go to the local grocer. The particularly doubtful ones get a little cleaning to make them pass muster and those that are fairly good aside from appearance are neglected.

"The country merchant tolerates these eggs, sometimes pays all he is able to secure for them and in some cases loses from one to one and a half cents a dozen in localities where competition is keen. He wants to hold the trade of egg producers, so he pulls down from his shelves good, fresh food, guaranteed for their quality and exchanges staples in which there can be no deterioration in quality under ordinary handling. These eggs are counted out in cases. Many merchants seldom sort eggs and, if they do, they too often let eggs which look doubtful pass the line and go into the case of guaranteed goods.

"The buyer takes these eggs, sorts them, assumes the responsibility of loss or gain, and in the latter case the gain shows no great profit for the chances taken and the effort expended. There are checks, broken eggs, eggs partly hatched, eggs decomposed that have to be sorted out, and when the eggs that are left go into storage, they fall short of the product the farmer could have sold to his grocer if he had used methods which the average business man would have only characterized as lax. The storage plants cannot altogether check the processes of ruin when once started, any more than could the old hand brake stop an ore train on down grade.

"These processes often start, too, in the kitchen where eggs are kept from week to week or until the farmer will find it convenient to barter his produce at the country store. There is generally a red hot stove in one corner of the room, and the eggs stand in a pail in another, subject to all changes of temperature from incubation down to refrigeration. They are sometimes kept on a porch, where the dampness of night and rains affect their quality. Some farmers keep their eggs in the cellar subject to dampness, foul air and foul odors. Even though eggs are gathered daily, which should always be done, and in some seasons of the year twice a day, care should be taken by the farmer in keeping his eggs in sanitary surroundings. To accomplish this the merchant, the commission man, the storage man, the packer, the retailer and the consumer must do team work to secure the best quality of product."

ABOUT BEANS AND THEIR CULTURE.

It has not been so many years since the bean was looked upon with scant favor by those who could afford a less common article of diet, says the Retailers' Journal. It was the food of the plain people, of the laboring class and farmers principally. But everything in the field of foodstuffs has undergone a decided change, in demand, of late. And this is particularly true of the bean.

This is no doubt due to our steadily increasing population, which in turn, brings about a proportionate increase in the demand. Another fact which contributes not a little to this condition and which is lost sight of by so many, is the influx of farmer youths into the cities and their desertion of the farms. And still another and perhaps a more direct cause for the latter day popularity of the bean is found in the distribution and exploitation of the vegetable by American canners. For many years the bean was considered coarse, tough and indigestible. And this prejudice was founded on no other cause than that few housewives understood how to prepare and cook it. In order to be easily digested beans should be cooked very slowly. Some of the best authorities claim that from six to twelve hours are required, according to the condition and variety of the bean.

Of later years bean culture has grown to enormous proportions in this country, but the industry has as yet failed to keep abreast of the demand. Second to no other vegetable the bean is the greatest food product of the American table. In the states of Michigan, New York and Wisconsin where the growing of the bean is carried on to greater proportion than in any other corner of the earth, there is seemingly no end to the green fields which roll away in great strips of land beyond the horizon. The output this year of the states just mentioned will run up to between fifteen and twenty thousand car-loads, each car having a capacity of forty thousand pounds.

This gives the reader a fair conception of what the total yield of the American crop may be expected to be. It should be said, however, in this connection that these are the great bean growing centers and that their output exceeds that of other states.

Among the many different varieties that are known to our climates the little white navy or pea bean is without doubt the great favorite among all classes. It is the smallest bean under cultivation, and is extremely hardy and productive. In Connecticut, where much of the soil is gritty, hilly and thickly mixed with gravel and stones, the farmers plant corn and in between the corn hills, navy beans.

The corn has a hard time of it in this arid soil and brings forth but a meager yield. But the little beans struggle up gamely and thrive under conditions that would discourage any other plant. The navy is also called the "soup" bean, owing to its excellent qualities fitting it for that purpose. It is also the bean most in vogue for baked dishes. Boiled with a piece of meat it makes a tempting dish of savory taste and odor. A chopped onion improves the flavor of a mess of beans in whichever manner they may be served.

Next in popularity comes the red kidney bean, so called owing to its peculiar color and kidney-like conformation. It is considerably larger than the navy and of a distinctly different taste. The water in which a mess of red kidneys has been boiled will be found to have turned a deep reddish color. This bean is particularly popular among farming populations, to which its strong flavor appeals. But the canned article, which is put up extensively, is a great favorite as a salad bean among all classes. Garnished with lettuce leaves, the red beans make a very attractive dish and a tasty one. In this manner many are used. In fact the red kidney comes second to the navy.

The "brown Swedish bean" is another variety of the large family. The "brown Swedish" resembles the red kidney in size but of course not in color. It is much in demand among foreign classes and is of a peculiarly mealy substance and individual flavor.

Few people are aware, when they sit down to a mess of Lima beans that this delicious vegetable is not a native of these parts, and that, indeed the only state in which it thrives and produces to any degree of success, is California.

The culture of the Lima bean has been attempted in those states where other varieties yield in abundance. But the trials have invariably resulted in failure. The beans were much smaller and lacked the rich, mellow flavor of the California product. Limas are now being imported into the United States from Madagascar. The size and quality of the bean are identical with those of the American variety and the two are hardly distinguishable. However, the Madagascar beans owe their existence to the California Limas. For they were first taken into that country from American soil for the purpose of experimenting, and if practical, enlarging in this manner the acreage of production. They proved a success in Madagascar and hence our yearly importations of Limas which add a handsome increase to the total yield.

There are as many varieties of beans as there are different tastes. A peculiar thing about it is that all the various populations have their favorite bean. This is particularly true of foreign classes; there are the white kidney bean, the yellow eye, the black eye, the pole bean, the butter bean, the marrow fat, and a variety of bunch beans, wax beans and climbers.

There is no item in the long list of spring and summer vegetables more welcome on our tables than string beans. From the first arrivals on the market, to the last shipment of the season, these highly valued articles find ready sale. They are at their best when cooked with a piece of ham, bacon or salt pork. And this, in fact, may be said of all the different varieties. Pork, more than beef or any other meat, gives the right "tang" to the beans, relieving them of their natural flatness. Certain varieties are raised exclusively to be eaten green. The quick returns and the good prices which they bring on the market form an objective point for their culture. Among the string varieties perhaps the most popular are the green bunch bean, the wax and the long, stout pole bean. These latter are the richest in flavor and are known to be very nutritious.

Among the many bean dishes in vogue, the most famous and time-honored is doubtless the "Boston baked," which originated with the coming of the Puritans to the New England shores. Boston baked beans are to New Englanders the great piece de resistance of their dietary. And be it said that not a little care and skill are required in their preparation. They are always served fresh from the oven, for the Saturday evening meal. And care is taken by the housewife that enough beans are prepared for breakfast on the morrow. This is a distinct tradition handed down to the latter day Yankees from the Pilgrim Fathers. The beans left over in this manner from the Saturday supper serve the three-fold service of providing a substantial meal at the outset of the day, of lessening the amount of manual labor on the Sabbath and insuring an early trip to church.

COUNTRYWIDE MILK STANDARDS.

Through the marine hospital service the federal government has just published the report of the commission on milk standards, appointed by the New York milk committee. The commission after a year's study of the situation, finds that milk should be graded and classified and the standards, ordinances and regulations of public health authorities for the control of milk supplies should be made uniform throughout the country. The commission insists upon having some standard method for estimating and comparing the bacterial character of milks and that every milk ordinance should contain a penalty clause. The cleanliness, ventilation and sanitary conditions of stables, the screening of milk rooms, the examination of cows at least every six months by a veterinarian employed by the health authorities, the application of the tuberculin test once a year and the removal of all suspected cows from the herd, the cleanliness of employes, utensils and the proper handling of milk in milk houses, receiving stations, bottling plants and in stores are features of the commission's report which it is hoped will standardize the industry throughout the country.

REGULATING A CITY'S MILK SUPPLY.

At a conference of Wisconsin health officers held some time ago the following address relative to a city's milk supply was made by Dr. H. E. Burger, of Beloit, Wis.:

"The importance of a safe milk supply while it has been vaguely before me because of the problem of infant feeding which confronts every physician in the course of his practice, was very strongly impressed upon me by a case with which I came in contact. I first saw the child, one and a half years old, at the office of another physician and concurred with him in his diagnosis of tubercular peritonitis. Some time later I was called to assist in an autopsy on this child and we found not only tubercular peritonitis, but well developed pulmonary tuberculosis. Now this child had been a bottle-fed baby, the milk being obtained from cattle on the farm of its father. There had been no history of tuberculosis in the family, or of exposure to tuberculosis. The cattle on the farm were not tested.

"Upon questioning the father we asked why he had not had his herd tested, and he admitted that it was because he was afraid he might lose a few head of stock. The answer of the family physician still rings in my ears: 'Better a thousand times lose every head of stock on your farm than on human life.'

"Now if this man was willing to sacrifice his own child, because of the fear of losing a few head of cattle, how much more important does it become to regulate the milk supply of a municipality. If a man shows no care or consideration for his own child, how much will he show for the lives of others? Only the municipalities, through their councils and health boards, can step in and rectify this evil.

"Then comes the question of how. I have read many milk ordinances and found none satisfactory. Some would be satisfactory if they could be enforced, but the enforcement is impractical, if not impossible. Any ordinance which attempts to lay down any hard and fast rules calling for certain methods of milking, etc., will not succeed for it cannot be enforced with the means and money in the hands of the local boards of health. Ideal ordinances are fine as ideals but are seldom practical, and what we desire is a good practical working ordinance, one which can be enforced at not too great expense, and one which is not so severe as to work a hardship on any man, but which will assure the city of a good clean milk supply. This is what is to be desired in a milk ordinance.

"The first step in outlining an ordinance is to provide for licensing the dealers. This gives us the right to prescribe certain rules. A fine for violating the ordinance may act as a deterrent for a while or it may not even do that much, but a fear of revocation of license will usually be effective. The license fee need not be great, its object is not for revenue, it may be a fixed sum per dealer, or it may be a small sum per wagon or vehicle used for distributing. This latter makes the license fee dependent upon the amount of business done and thus equalizes the slight expense. A copy of the license should be kept in every wagon and the number of the license printed on the outside of the wagon, thereby permitting exact and easy identification of the same. The license may be made renewable every year.

"Next a section should be inserted giving power to the board of health, under proper restrictions, to pass further rules as such may be needed, with regard to the handling of milk. This section is of importance because no ordinance can be made perfect, and no perfect ordinance will work perfectly under all conditions and in all municipalities. With this provision emergencies may be dealt with as they arise without the delay attendant on council meetings, where amendments will be discussed, referred to this or that committee, held up, tabled, etc. The board of health will meet, discuss the problem, determine a method of meeting it, and make its rules which can be put into effect almost immediately, while a council order, unless passed under emergency rules, will not go into effect until twenty days after publication.

"Now comes the question of dealing with tuberculosis, a vitally important question, to me the most important of all. This can be handled only from tested cows. The status of the tuberculin test in cattle is firmly established and calls for no explanation or discussion on my part. Even laymen who have seen its workings can appreciate it. One of Beliot's leading citizens watched the testing of a herd, and afterwards the post mortems which disclosed the lesions. He said it is wonderful, not a cow condemned but what showed lesions, some with advanced lesions appearing perfectly healthy until killed. Upon this test we must depend. To make the tuberculin test imperative is our manifest duty to our cities.

"To make sure of the test I have contrived a method which, so far as I know, is original. Every licensed dealer is required to furnish monthly a sworn list of all people who supply him with milk, address of such people, number of cows in the herd and notice of any change or addition to the herd during the month. Blanks for this purpose are provided by the city for uniformity's sake. By having the book-keeper for the dairy a notary public, the licensed dealer can assure himself that the statements of those supplying him are true and thus protect himself from perjury.

"These lists the health officer files and indexes and checks up by the lists of the month previous. Then he notifies the owners of the herds to produce copies of the certificates of tests and file them within thirty days. These certificates must not be over two years old. If any additions are made to the herd during the month, certificates covering such additions must also be filed. Thus without leaving his office the health officer can be absolutely sure that every cow whose milk is sold in this city is tested. If certificates are not produced, the licensed dealer is ordered to refuse the milk.

"At first glance this may seem rather stringent, but careful thought shows that no one is in the least oppressed. The first cost of the testing of the herd is offset by the assurance of no more tuberculosis, no worry and by increased sale value. Further additions if made to the herd, should be tested from a common sense point of view. No man should willingly risk reinfecting his herd once he has it cleaned out. A man should buy tested cattle or subject to test. Retesting every three years is merely a matter of ordinary precaution and the cost is a cheap insurance against loss from tuberculosis.

"It is understood, of course, that the terms of the ordinance forbid the sale of any milk coming from a herd with reacting cattle in it."

FOODS: PLAIN AND FANCY.

The committee on Markets of the New York State Food Investigation, says the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, has made an interim report on the conditions in New York City. The report states that the city spends about $644,683,000 a year for food. Of this sum nearly one-half goes for the item of distribution alone. At least from ten to twenty per cent. of this cost would be saved through less handling by transportation agencies and middlemen. The commission does not favor municipal markets, but a series of retail department food stores, each capable of serving from 25,000 to 50,000 people. These stores would insure a minimum of waste, due return upon capital and equity in distribution charges.

Other points in the report are interesting. The attractive package foods cost 40 per cent. more than the same goods when sold in bulk. Just so much for a name and a bright wrapper, which, of course in the case of standard goods, mean much, but not quite 40 per cent. Trading stamps add three per cent. to the cost of goods with whose sale they are connected. Delivery by wagon and by auto add ten per cent. to the cost of goods purchased and sent home. Cold storage goods are 8 per cent. higher than fresh ones.

Wherefore, there are several plans worth trying outside of a general food boycott. Other things being equal buy in bulk instead of fancy packages. Cut out the trading stamp. Carry your purchases home. And don't ask for things out of season. These rules will help, if they do not solve the problem of the high cost of living. Only they must be followed by a majority of the people or their influence will be neutralized.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

Never before in the history of the world has the outlook for the dairy farmer been so promising as it is to-day, remarks the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal. It is stated by the leading authorities on the dairying industry that we shall witness in the near future such an intense demand for dairy produce as to make a decline in prices impossible. Indications point slowly but surely in the opposite direction. In passing through the east recently the most conspicuous and notable feature is the rapid awakening of China. Pigtailed discarded, accompanied by the adoption of our western methods of living. In the larger cities the hotel, restaurant and cook-shop proprietors all complain of the cheese and butter supply being hopelessly inadequate. In wearing apparel the trend of things is even more marked. Instead of cotton jumpers and pantaloons, we find the Celestials wearing tweed suits of modern English cut.

In 1906 the consumption of ice cream in the United States was about 55,000,000 gallons. In 1910 it had increased to 100,000,000 gallons. Last year the consumption reached the prodigious total of 120,000,000 gallons. This means about five quarts for every man, woman and child in the country, on the average. As many millions eat no ice cream or scarcely any, it is clear that a large part of the population must far exceed the five quart mark.

A produce commission house of Temple, Texas, shipped ten refrigerator carloads of eggs to the northern market, one day not long ago, each car containing 400 cases, with thirty dozen to each case, making a total of 144,000 eggs to the car, or a grand total for the shipment of 1,144,000.

The past year has been an exceedingly prosperous one for California Fruit Growers' Association, whose assets are now over $6,000,000. Last year's sales amounted to $16,500,000, on which there was a profit of $603,000. The association has a surplus of $1,000,000.

A polished floor or a polished counter will shine like a looking glass if rubbed up with a little milk put on a cloth. Milk is said to be far better than oil for this purpose.

A Milford, Delaware, grocer has constructed a homemade fly trap which he has found effective in ridding his place of business of the pests. The trap is made from a box one and a half feet long, one foot high and one foot wide, both the sides and the top being sawed out and covered with wire netting. The box is then raised about a foot from the floor and the neck of a large funnel is run up through the bottom of the box and adjusted tight so that the mouth of the funnel is about an inch from the floor. A saucer of molasses or something sweet to draw the flies, is set under the mouth of the funnel, leaving room for the flies to go up the funnel and into the box. As soon as the box is filled the flies are drowned, and the process repeated.

The Grocers' Magazine remarks: Men who engage in the grocery business with the idea that they will remain in it only a short time, seldom make a success of it. Every business requires all the energy there is in a man, and of no business is this more true than of the grocery business.

Harper's Weekly is responsible for the following paragraph: The Englishman in easy circumstances, on rising in the morning shaves himself with American soap, with a safety razor of Yankee make. He puts on North Carolina stockings and shoes from Boston, and throws over his shoulders suspenders from Connecticut. Into his pocket he puts a Waltham or Waterbury watch, and sits down to his dejeuner. He congratulates his wife on a corset from Illinois and a bodice that comes from Massachusetts. He eats bread made from the flour ground in the mills on the great lakes. He eats bacon from Kansas City and oysters from Baltimore, while his wife cuts a beef tongue from Chicago. And while eating his luncheon he reads his paper printed by an American machine on American paper with American ink, and edited by some lively journalist from New York.

The New York Journal recently published an edifying editorial, based upon the fact that four million of the people's dollars are lost daily in the purchase of fake securities and stated that if the people would only ask, such information is always at hand, to make such a loss not only unnecessary, but clear cut foolishness. Commenting on the article The Grocers' Review states that it would be hard to estimate the number of dollars daily wasted by the retail grocers who in the wake of false leads are constantly crucifying themselves. No doubt it would reach five figures. Confirmed information would enthrone prosperity where perturbation now reigns.

A trade journal states that the provisions of the food laws relating to canned vegetables, etc., are to be enforced and it advises merchants not to overlook the guarantee while dealing in bargain lots.

The wise, well posted dairy farmer says: I must see to it first that I have profit-making cows. Then I must feed them up to their best capacity with the right kind of feed. In that way only can I make the largest profit. I must have rich soil. I must spend some money every year to keep it up, then I must give it the best of seed and tillage for only from such soil and such conditions can I make the best profit.

Mr. George Hine, who for some time has been instructor in dairying for the Extension Department of the Kansas State Agricultural College, has recently been appointed Dairy Commissioner of Kansas. Mr. Hine's position with the college has placed him in close touch with the dairy industry of the state and has given him unusual opportunity to study the needs of the Kansas dairy farmers and manufacturers.

A retail meat dealer in Ogden, Utah, has devised a novel plan to reduce delivery expense and make prices more attractive to his customers, and its working out will be watched with interest. This dealer will base his charge to customers on two points—whether they call, carry their packages home, or have them delivered, and in the latter case the distance will make a difference. The prices will be based on the customers calling at the shop and carrying home their own supplies. There will be no free deliveries. The dealer will keep delivery wagons in service, but for each delivery made he will charge one cent a block. A customer living five blocks from the market will pay five cents delivery charges and a customer living ten blocks away will pay ten cents, and so on.

A rather interesting case, says the Pacific Dairy Review, has been tried in a Tulare county court and it shows how fine we are getting down on the sanitary phase of dairying. A state dairy inspector caused the arrest of a local dairyman on the charge of using unclean cans for his milk. The inspector declared on the witness stand that he has found a lot of foul scum along the seams of the cans, showing they had not been washed. He backed up his testimony with expert witnesses, one being the inspector for the City of Los Angeles. The dairyman contended that his cans were clean, because he sterilized them with boiling water and nothing more could be demanded of him. The case was fought on the ground whether the cans should first have been washed by hand. The outcome has not been reported but it will serve to bring to light some valuable facts about the important subject of can washing.

According to recently compiled figures a sufficient quantity of fish are caught annually by the United States fisheries to allow each one of the 92,000,000 inhabitants, twenty-seven and one-half pounds per year. The United States does a business of $67,000,000 a year; the Japanese $75,000,000 a year. With Japan's 40,000,000 inhabitants this would give each person in the Empire sixty pounds. In Japan there are millions who eat fish morning, noon and night, but in this country, the general average is no more than three meals of fish per week. England, including Wales, produces $99,000,000 worth of fish annually. Of the kinds of fish represented in the above estimate, oysters have the first place as they comprise thirty per cent. of the total catch. Salmon are next, cod next, then shad, lobster and clams are mentioned. One particular reason why oysters and salmon are at the head of the list is that they are extensively used for canning, as well as being sold in the fresh state.

The United States farmer is, collectively, the most wealthy capitalist the world has ever known. By the 1900 census, the farmers had invested in agriculture in the United States $20,000,000,000, which last year produced $7,000,000,000. Such a yearly income means $580,000,000 a month or $19,000,000 a day.

CANDY—CHEAP AND EXPENSIVE.

CHARLES H. LAWALL, CHEMIST TO THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE DAIRY AND FOOD DEPARTMENT. READ BEFORE THE DOMESTIC SCIENCE AND PURE FOOD CONGRESS, NEW YORK.

The word "candy" is derived from the Orientals by whom sweetmeats and sugar have been used from the earliest times. The Hindustan Khand and the Arabic quand, as well as words of similar sound in other Eastern languages, signify "sugar," and are traceable to the Sanskrit word Khanda, meaning a portion or piece. The definition of candy in its strictest sense limits it to "any confection having sugar as its basis, however prepared."

The word "confectionery," a broader term applied frequently to candy, is from the Latin, conficere, to compound, and really embraces all food preparations of the nature of sweetmeats, pastry, etc., which have sugar as a basis or for the principal ingredient.

As the Oriental origin of the word indicates candy is an ancient food product and its early use by Eastern people points to an intuitive knowledge of the value and necessity of the carbohydrates as food stuffs. In the early days of the use of candy by European nations, the manufacture and sale of sweetmeats was exclusively carried on by druggists, who, we find in the year 1581 in Nuremburg, entered a protest against the encroachment upon their rights by other persons engaged in trade in a resolution containing the following:

"May it please the Honorable Council to lend ear to our complaints and in conformity therewith to see fit, in such a manner, to protect our interests, that henceforth we shall not be unduly oppressed by the physicians, and that each of us shall be enabled to enjoy the just results of his labors. The following, Honorable Sirs, forms the substance of our complaint:

"1. The sale of all confections, formerly dispensed by us, has now fallen in to the hands of the sugar dealer," etc.

It was manifestly impossible, of course, for pharmacists to control such a rapidly developing business and we find it carried on at present in an entirely separate manner, except for the fact that many druggists carry candy manufactured by others, as a side line, confining their manufacturing operations to such medicated confections as still survive in the materia medica of the present.

The manufacture of a candy has probably reached the highest degree of perfection and the greatest magnitude in America, although in Germany and in France it is also of great importance, the French word "bon bon" (a duplication of the word "good") having been practically Anglicized and found in common every day use among English speaking peoples.

The competitive effort to originate new and attractive forms has caused candy to occupy a peculiar and distinctive place among food stuffs, both as to the attitude of the purchasing public and in the eyes of the law. Coloring matters, even of the permissible varieties, are required to have notice of their presence given to the consumer in the case of food stuffs in general, but in candy the addition of coloring matter is looked upon as an esthetic necessity in order to provide an attractive variety and therefore any harmless color is permitted in confectionery where its presence is not deceptive and because it is really desired by the majority of purchasers.

In the manufacture of candy the basis is usually sugar or some related carbohydrate such as glucose. A carbohydrate is a complex chemical constituent of food stuffs in which carbon is combined with hydrogen and oxygen, the two latter elements being present in the same proportion in which they exist in water, hence the expressiveness of the word "carbohydrate." The carbohydrates form a valuable class of food stuffs including the starches, sugars and some of the fats and serve as fuels for the animal organism.

Sugar is obtainable from a number of natural sources, the most important of which are sugar cane, sugar beat, sorghum and sugar maple, the first and second sources being used for the refined sugar of commerce, the third and fourth being usually employed in the unrefined condition on account of the attractiveness of the natural flavor. Sugar is also used in candy in the unrefined form as molasses or brown sugar.

Glucose another carbohydrate used in the manufacture of candy, is not a natural product, but is made from starch by the action of acid which is afterward removed, leaving the glucose in a pure condition. The bad reputation which glucose has acquired in the mind of the public is partly due to the fact that it was formerly manufactured and purified by methods which left it contaminated with harmful substances and also because, as in the case of oleomargarine and butter, it was not sold and used upon its own merits but was secretly employed as a cheap substitute for sugar, which it is capable of replacing to a large extent for many purposes. The name "corn syrup," which is now legally applied to it is misinterpreted by the average purchaser to mean a syrup prepared from corn in the same way that syrup is prepared from the sugar cane. This impression is not correct and is also faulty in that the product can be equally well prepared from any other variety of starch as well as corn starch and in Germany is usually made from potato starch, in which case the name "corn syrup" would not be correctly applied. When properly made and purified, as is done at present, it is looked upon by the majority of authorities as being a wholesome food, the few who disagree on this point basing their objections upon the fact that unlike cane sugar it is not a simple carbohydrate of definite chemical composition, but is a complex mixture of several carbohydrates, of which one of the less important is comparatively indigestible.

When sugar is heated with small quantities of acids, such as are present in many fruits, or intentionally added in the shape of vinegar or cream of tartar in the manufacture of candy, it is chemically decomposed with the formation of a new substance known as invert sugar, which consists of two carbohydrates, both different from the original sugar and one of which is identical with the principal carbohydrate of glucose. This invert sugar, which is purposely formed in certain kinds of candy, possesses the same property as is possessed by glucose, of making a soft creamy mass which does not readily grain or crystallize.

When sugar is heated to a temperature high enough to partly burn or char, there is formed a substance called caramel, which possesses powerful coloring properties and which communicates a flavor which is attractive to many. When sugar is heated to a temperature short of the caramelizing point, it is modified in its character and assumes a state known as barley sugar, in which it is in a solid, glassy uncrystallizable condition. There are other and intermediate temperatures at which sugar assumes physical conditions varying according to the degree of heat, and therefore such terms as "thread," "soft ball," "hard ball," "crack" and "hard crack" are technically used by confectioners to describe the conditions which the cooked mass will assume upon cooling. This illustrates the infinite possibilities of candy making, taking into account the immense number of colors and flavors available for use, and shows how a large variety of forms and consistence may result from the use of a comparatively small number of basic ingredients.

We often hear astonishment expressed at the fact that candy can be sold so cheaply and equal astonishment at the fact that it can be made to cost so much. Both sets of critics overlook several important facts which are easily apparent to the reasoning individual. About the cheapest price at which good candy can be sold at retail to afford even a small margin of profit, is 8 or 10 cents a pound. Such candy can be and usually is pure and wholesome, as in it are used only sugar or molasses, glucose, flavors and colors, the total cost of which to the manufacturer will not aggregate more than 6 or 7 cents a pound, and as all candy contains more moisture (added in its preparation) than is naturally present in the ingredients, another element of profit, usually overlooked, is apparent.

When we consider the higher priced candies and the causes for their high prices, we find that not only is the labor expended upon them much greater in proportion (many of them being made entirely by hand while the cheaper candies are made altogether by machinery), but that expensive ingredients such as nuts, chocolate, fruits, etc., are freely used, thus accounting for much of their increased cost.

At the present time it may be confidently stated, I believe, that candy is more rarely adulterated than ever in its history. In the Federal Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, the following specific clause is directed toward candy: "A substance shall be deemed to be adulterated: In the case of confectionery: If it contains terra alba, barytes, talc, chrome yellow, or other mineral substance or poisonous color or flavor or other ingredient deleterious or detrimental to health, or any vinous, malt or spirituous liquor or compound or narcotic drug." We here see a specific prohibition of a number of substances by name. Terra alba is a synonym for powdered gypsum, a pulverized rock resembling plaster of Paris; barytes is another mineral substance, very heavy and insoluble, used principally as a filler in paper manufacture or as a white pigment; talc is powdered soapstone, the substance commonly used as a toilet powder; chrome yellow is a poisonous compound of lead used as a pigment. None of these, with the exception of talc, which has been reported in small quantities in certain candies like jelly beans where it is used as a polishing agent, has been reported as a candy adulterant for years. The manufacturers of candy themselves have, through their trade organizations, brought about a cessation of trade practices which were in vogue some years ago and which were undoubtedly harmful. Even before the publishing of the ruling of the United States Department of Agriculture, in which a list of permitted colors was given, these same confectioners' associations both here and abroad, had been working toward the same end, namely, the encouraging of the use of a certain few colors which were known to be harmless and the discouraging of the use of a large number which were either known positively to be harmful or were of doubtful character. This is not to be taken as meaning that all candy manufacturers lived up to these rules or that no adulterated candy has been sold, for the published records of the Federal cases and the Proceedings of the many State Dairy and Food Commissioners have shown otherwise.

There have been found in candy in the past, and prosecutions have been brought and sustained against the cases, such products as sulphur dioxide, a bleaching agent formerly used extensively in glucose but now discontinued for that purpose, and also found in candy as the result of the use of impure gelatin or glue; shellac and similar waterproof glazing materials sometimes carrying with them other harmful constituents such as arsenic; alcoholic liquors, and sometimes fusel oil found in cordial drops; brown mineral pigments in imitation of chocolate, and other constituents equally discreditable, but by far the greater proportion of the candy sold for some time past has been free from positively harmful ingredients.

In 1911, working under the direction of State Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, of Pennsylvania, I made an extensive investigation of more than 250 samples of candies, particularly of the cheap varieties, and of this number only 4 cases were recommended for prosecution, 3 for the use of small quantities of talc and one for the use of sulphur dioxide as a bleaching agent. The detailed results of the examination of these 250 samples, together with comments thereon, were at that time published as Bulletin 216 of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture and observations were made of particular facts which I believe to be worthy of repetition at this time because I believe they are still applicable to trade conditions.

The criticism which can justly be brought against many cheap candies is not on account of the presence of constituents harmful in themselves, but partly on account of the careless manner in which such candy is handled and exposed for sale, thus rendering it liable to all kinds of contamination, partly on account of the indigestible character of some of the puffed up penny marshmallow specialties, and partly because by the competitive efforts of the manufacturers to provide novelties, such candies as are in the form of flexible belts, necklaces, tubes, etc., or are in the form of toy doll babies, soldiers, whistles, guns or marbles. These latter are usually played with by the child before eating, with results that would make a bacteriologist hold up his hands in horror.

Prize package candies have also been observed by me in which small tokens made of poisonous metals are imbedded or are in contact with the candy itself.

Some of these needed reforms can be brought about only through the co-operation of such manufacturers as realize and accept the responsibility for the perpetuation of such discreditable conditions. Other reforms must be stimulated by the education of the vendor of cheap candies, who in the city is frequently a sidewalk merchant and who must be compelled by law if necessary to protect his customers, most of whom are unable to protect themselves by reason of their tender ages. I have seen candy sold by these vendors that was not only filthy as to external appearance, but was also alive with vermin, requiring a close examination for their detection.

One of the frauds that is frequently perpetrated in cheap candy is the substitution of cheaper, and frequently less digestible substances for chocolate. The manufacturer of such products protects himself by avoiding the use of the word "chocolate," either on the package or the invoice. In many instances, the retailer, though careless, is ignorant of this condition and of course, the purchaser is the one eventually deceived, either with or without the connivance of the manufacturer or retailer. This condition should also be remedied. When a candy which looks like chocolate is made wholly or partly from any chocolate substitute, the same protection should be afforded the purchaser as is given in similar instances in other classes of food products.

In the more expensive candies these conditions or others of a similar character are less likely to occur. One which I call to mind is the fact that all of the crystallized violet and rose leaves which are used partly for their decorative effect in expensive box candies, are artificially colored, and that in some cases what look like candied violets are in reality selected popcorn flakes ingeniously colored and sugared to give the appearance of violet flowers.

These few facts regarding candy are herewith presented in the hope that their dissemination will lead to a more widespread interest in the matter which will ultimately result in the still further improvement in the purity and wholesomeness of candy cheap and expensive.

THE OMNIPRESENT COMMERCIAL TRAVELER.

The following address was delivered by James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, before The Wholesale Grocers Salesmen's Association, Hotel Walton, Philadelphia, November 8th, 1912:

"Gentlemen:—I do not think this occasion is one on which it would be desirable for me to discuss policies so far as concerns the Department of government with which I am connected. Hence in this brief address I will not talk shop.

"As I look over this gathering of representatives of the great commercial interests, I cannot help but think of the vast commercial changes that, within a generation, have taken place in this country. Of these changes you are at once the product and exponent. Your occupation was born of the exigencies of modern business life. You are now indispensable—just as much so as the telephone, the telegraph, fast freight and express, modern postal facilities and the great express trains of our continental railroads. You are, in fact, the pushing, throbbing, vital force of modern business. Your occupation is to make business, exploit business, get business and do business. The commercial salesman is the propelling power of modern industry. He is the best advertiser that the business man has. The business house that depends solely upon printing, valuable as it is, to exploit its products misses the personal touch which makes the commercial traveler the best medium of advertisement.

"As I look into your faces, I cannot help thinking what a potent influence, not only in the commercial life of the people but in their political and social thought is wielded by this army of advance agents of our new civilization. We have an idea in these modern days that our government is made by the newspapers and there is no doubt that the great magazines and great metropolitan newspapers do wield tremendous influence in making and unmaking our public servants passing our laws and, sometimes, in construing and enforcing them. It seems sometimes as though there ought to be added to the cabinet of our President a new cabinet officer, a sort of publicity promoter. Certain it is that some of our presidents have failed or have made their paths exceedingly rough and stony by reason of a failure to properly exploit the doings of their administration.

"But however potent in the political world, the power of the public press for the purposes of publicity, it is almost matched by the force and power that I see before me. If a political leader of state or nation could enlist under his banner the army of the commercial traveler and send forth this army to use the push, force and fire of its integers in propagating his doctrine or promoting his cause, I am persuaded that the public press would have to look to its laurels. The commercial traveler is a splendid political promoter. He can spread far and wide to remote village and hamlet the deeds of political discord and unrest. He can nourish and vitalize the plants germinated therefrom; but he can also propagate, at his will, the doctrines of the conservative or the stand patter. He is a consummate judge of human nature, because the one indispensable quality he must have in order to attain success is to know men. He may have no college degree. He may know little of the great vitalizing forces which move modern civilization. He may sometimes forget the Ten Commandments, if he ever learned them. But he does know men. Pope says that, "The proper study of man-kind is man." The commercial traveler is an enthusiastic believer in Pope, although he may never have heard of him or this quotation. The commercial traveler is also the best political prophet. He catches the political drift where it is not influenced by local current or eddy. He breathes sentiment over a wide territory. He generally knows what the people are thinking and what is likely to be the result of an election. If you must bet on an election don't bet with a commercial traveler. If you do you will generally lose.

"Turning now from politics, I want to congratulate your association upon the fact that the commercial traveler has made a distinct place for himself. He has made a distinct place for himself, because he earned it. We usually get in this world about what we deserve. I desire to congratulate your association on the progress you have made in force, morals and intelligence and to a greater mead of praise that will be yours in the future of your association.

"For conclusion I thank you sincerely for your invitation to be present on this pleasant occasion."

WHAT IS GOOD MARKET MILK?

A great deal is written these days concerning the sanitary production of milk, says J. M. Trueman, in "The Country Gentleman." Much advice that is non-essential and confusing has been given the farmer until he is often very much puzzled as to what he ought to do. It cannot be denied that the farmer owes serious obligations to the persons who use the milk he produces, but they cannot expect him to establish a plant that contains all the elaborate conveniences for producing "germless" milk that are found in some of our certified dairies where the milk sells from fifteen to twenty cents a quart.

What is good milk? The answer to this question should include the health of the cows, cleanliness of production, and low temperatures for storage. Good milk should contain no harmful germs. Many kinds of bacteria found in milk are perfectly harmless. When the milk contains only a small number of bacteria it is fairly safe to assume that it contains none that is harmful. When large numbers are present and the milk is fresh it is proof that it has been carelessly handled. If large numbers of the colon bacillus are present it is proof of contamination from the manure. This colon bacillus is constantly found in the intestines of the cow, and its presence in the milk is proof that there has been some contamination from that source. Low number of germs, therefore and few colon bacilli show that there has been careful handling in a clean stable. Any milk that constantly contains less than 50,000 germs per cubic centimeter—fifteen drops—is likely to be fairly wholesome. Good milk, therefore, should have low bacterial count, contain about 4 per cent. of butter fat, and be free from odors or flavors caused by feeding spoiled or other undesirable foods.

The man who is conducting a dairy can do much to improve the wholesomeness of the product by careful methods. This cannot be done without adding to the cost of production. Careful work means better men, higher wages and more time. Let no one, therefore, think it is as easy to produce clean milk as dirty milk, or that the clean milk should be sold at the same price as the other.

The milk sent to the city has not been improved so much as it might have been, because the men who are making certified milk have set such a standard that it is impossible for the general farmer or average dairyman to reach it. For that reason a great many have refused to do anything by way of improvement. I want to call attention to the fact that, although it costs more to produce clean milk, it does not cost so much as to prohibit its production even by the general dairyman.

A few rules instead of many and a will to do the best possible under any given conditions will work wonders. Six points may be mentioned as essential:

1. A clean barn, not polished like a drawing room, but white-washed and kept free from cobwebs, everything being done that is reasonable to keep down dust.
2. Clean cows. Some bedding should be used that will keep the cows dry and make it easy to keep them clean. Clipped flanks and udders are easier to keep clean than those covered with long hair.
3. A smaller topped milking pail. This reduces more than any other one thing the amount of dirt that will get into the milk in the barn. Milkers will object to this pail, but if they are obliged to use it they will soon become accustomed to the small opening and find that they can get along without serious difficulty.
4. An honest milker who will do as he is told. This is the important requirement. It costs more to get good men but they are essential.
5. Cool the milk quickly after milking. If the dairy is not large and the milk is bottled on the farm put it in the bottles without cooling as soon as possible after milking, cap and set it immediately in the ice water. This gives less chance for contamination than when the milk is run over the cooler. Every vessel with which the milk comes in contact adds to the number of germs it contains. The air must be very clear and free from dust if the cooler is to be used; otherwise the milk is made worse instead of better.

The custom of using an aerator in the barn or in any room that is not free from dust cannot be too seriously condemned. Furthermore, many aerators are hard to wash and sterilize and thus become a serious source of contamination to the milk. The milk should be put into as few vessels as possible. The best method of cooling milk for shipment in cans is to strain it directly from the cow into the can and then set it in ice water as soon as the can is full. In large dairies or bottling plants where a special room is used for cooling, the milk may be run over the aerator safely, as the air can be kept clean. In small dairies, however, it is best to fill the bottles quickly with the warm milk and cool it by setting them in ice water.

The old notion that the milk must be cooled and aerated in order to get rid of the animal odor is wrong. Milk drawn from a healthy cow into clean vessels contains absolutely no odor or flavor except the pleasing taste of good milk. This is also true for milk cooled in 40 quart cans by being set into ice water. Keep the milk cool until delivered to the consumer. Milk produced in the way described should keep perfectly sweet and wholesome for three or four days if kept below 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

6. Know what it costs you to produce clean milk and have the backbone to ask a fair price for your product.

There are several things the consumer can do to help:

1. Insist on the dairyman's furnishing a guaranty that the milk comes from healthy cows and has been put into properly sterilized bottles.

2. Put the milk in a cool place as soon as it is delivered by the milkman. Don't leave it in the sun or by the stove until it is warm and then blame the milkman when it gets sour in less than twenty-four hours.

3. Keep it in the bottle in which it is delivered until it is all used up. Don't take it out of the sterile bottle and put it into a dish washed with a dishcloth and wiped with the ordinary dish towel and then blame the dairyman because it goes off flavor.

4. Be willing to meet the dairyman fairly and discuss without prejudice the price that should be paid for milk that is of the proper richness and that is sanitary.

MEASURING COLOR—AN OLEO STANDARD.

The bureau of Standards of the United States government has recently perfected a system of measuring color, making it possible to submit any article to an optical laboratory and get the color and shade of color with as much accuracy as the report on a sample submitted to a bacteriological or chemical laboratory. The method consists in first determining the "dominant hue" by a system of wave length measurements and then ascertaining the tint or shade of that hue in terms of the per cent. of white that would have to be mixed with the natural prismatic pure color to obtain the shade under examination.

The directors of the National Dairy Union have been investigating this process and as a result have incorporated it into a bill introduced in Congress. By the terms of this bill the manufacture of oleomargarine "in imitation or semblance of butter of any shade of yellow" is prohibited but as this expression is vague and indefinite the law goes on to say that "for the purpose of this act margarin shall be deemed to be in imitation or semblance of butter of any shade of yellow when it has less than 55 per cent. of white."

In the investigation the Bureau of Standards examined the color of a large number of samples of butter and oleomargarine. It was found that butter and oleomargarine are scientifically of the same color, the "dominant hue" having substantially the same wave length. This fact may be of importance in the enforcement of the law in some of the states. The difference between butter and oleomargarine so far as color goes is in the shade or tint, oleomargarine being generally of a lighter tint than butter.

TYPHOID FEVER AND MILK.

A Maryland dairyman was recently heavily fined for selling milk when five of his children were ill with typhoid fever. His wife nursed the sick children and also helped to milk the cows. There were deaths in two families to which the dairyman sold milk. Opposition to some over-extreme rules of boards of health occasionally leads a milk producer to be sceptical as to modern health notions. But it is a fact that typhoid is a germ disease spread by spreading the germs and that milk is an occasional carrier of these typhoid germs. This cannot be disputed. No person, having any care of those sick with typhoid fever, should ever handle milk or milk utensils.

From another state comes a report of thirty typhoid cases from an infected well. The dairyman was particular in cleaning his milk cans and sterilized them with boiling water. Then just before putting milk into them, using water from the infected well to rinse them. Here is a point often overlooked: Milk utensils are scalded to kill the bacteria in them; but when the work is well done and all the bacteria are destroyed, this is no insurance against other bacteria getting into the can or pail in dust that may fall into it or in the water that may be used for rinsing.

THE COST OF MILK.

It is safe to say, remarks "The Milk Reporter," that the present cost of producing milk is at least 30 per cent. greater than that of five years ago. Also it is safe to say that within that time there has been no adequate advance in the market price to offset this increased cost.

This explains the decreased number of milk cows in commission and makes it plain that this decrease must continue until processes are adjusted to meet existing conditions. While we take no stock in the assertion that "milk cannot be sold for enough to cover the cost of production," it undoubtedly is a fact that under present conditions there is so little profit to be derived from the production of milk that it is not attractive as a business proposition.

We have always contended that an article that could not be sold for enough to cover the cost of production and a fair profit would gradually disappear from the market. And now that is just what is the matter with milk.

COST AND PRICE OF MILK.

The Milk Dealer has the following article on the Cost and Price of milk in a recent issue:

The Boston papers seem to have great difficulty in understanding why producers think the price of milk should be advanced. To be sure other food articles have been going higher for some time past.

Milk has always been about the cheapest article of food on the market. Even if the retail price should be advanced to 10 cents a quart that would be about 5 cents a pound for an article as full of nutriment as some kinds of meat food. Milk at 10 cents a quart is very much cheaper than steak at 25 to 40 cents a pound. The difference between the wholesale and retail price of milk is in about the same proportion as the middleman's profit on meats, fruits and perishable vegetables. Of course if the retail price is to be put up, it is perfectly reasonable that the wholesale price is to be raised and the producers naturally desire the benefit of the advance.

One of the Boston papers quotes the government crop report as an argument against the advance. It is true that the crops of the country as a whole are in good condition, but that does not influence the situation of the eastern milk producers, whose costs are continually advancing. Hay has been a light crop for several years and is not a heavy crop this year. Grain is still very high and labor costs a third more than it used to for the same quality of help. The fact that western farmers are promised good crops does not make it any cheaper to produce milk there.

It is not easy to see why some Boston papers should claim that the producers' demands are unreasonable, in view of the fact that milk is advancing in other eastern cities, that the supply is short, and that other provisions depending upon the same conditions as milk are advancing in price. The plain fact is that it costs more to produce milk in the northeast than it does in the west, or even in the middle states, and the slightly higher price commanded in the Boston market is not more than a necessary offset to the natural conditions.

THE SALE OF ROTTEN EGGS FOR FOOD.

In its issue of October 7, The Grocery World and General Merchant, a Philadelphia publication devoted to the grocery trade, prints an article signed by E. J. B., relative to the nefarious practice of selling eggs unfit for human consumption. The writer says in part:

"I have a rather wide knowledge of the operation of the food laws and the various forms of their violation, but never up-to-date have I encountered any form of food law violation which could compare for blackness of heart and conscience with the business that has recently been exposed in Philadelphia, viz., the sale of rotten eggs for food. The men who can do a thing like that are beneath human pity and contempt. They are worse than the ghouls who prey on graves.

"I can name at least three men who have gotten rich at this business in the last two years. The thing started with somebody's discovery that a cake made with rotten eggs will neither smell nor taste rotten after it is baked; the cooking destroys the visible evidence of the decomposition though it leaves the decomposed matter itself.

"The discovery created a constant temptation in the minds of a certain class of bakers to use the stuff for it could be bought for eight cents a pound, while good canned eggs cost 19 cents. It is perfectly obvious that the baker who paid but 8 cents per pound for his principal raw material could easily outdistance a competitor who paid 19 cents.

"Competition is keen and the fact that it forced a number of erst-while respectable bakers to use rotten filth in their cakes is merely another evidence that competition is not always the life of trade.

"I saw and smelt samples of these eggs—may I never have a more nauseating experience. The very thought that that stinking mass of green-streaked, slimy, yellow filth had been sold for food, and was every day being used for food, was enough to turn the stomach.

"Every pound of it was guaranteed to comply with the food law!"

CERTIFIED BUTTER.

There is every reason to believe, remarks the Butter, Cheese and Egg Journal, that there is a field for the production and sale of certified butter, the same as there is for certified milk. The name "certified" has already been given sufficient publicity and advertising to guarantee that the butter will be immediately received with favor on all markets. Unlike certified milk, however, certified butter must be made to conform to entirely different standards. Unfortunately the term certified has never been cornered or defined in a satisfactory way so that it may be construed literally to mean "safe." At present it is an arbitrary word chosen to signify that some accepted authority guarantees and stands responsible for the product bearing the name "certified."

The consumer is not deeply concerned in the standards adopted, provided the product meets his demands and is satisfactory to his palate, which, while uncultivated, can readily distinguish sweet clean butter from its second cousin made from globe trotting cream. Such a system of inspection as that adopted by the navy department of the United States government is perhaps the most satisfactory guarantee that the butter is pure. The specifications bearing on butter packed for the navy require that the acidity, salt content and water be kept within reasonable bounds and the inspector in charge has authority to eliminate raw material of questionable flavor.

At the present crisis of the creamery industry when every pound of poor butter manufactured is an argument for oleo and a dagger in the back of the dairy industry, certified butter is a most welcome arrival. It will cost more than butter made from second and third grade cream, but it will be a factor in restoring confidence. We have no apprehension for the future, however, as good local creamery will always be on the market at a good price.

FROZEN AND DRIED EGGS.

Frozen and dried eggs intended for human consumption are largely used for cooking purposes where inferiority may be concealed, as in baking cakes or making custards, omelets, pies, etc. The traffic in eggs sold for drying and freezing has greatly increased in the past few years. Strictly fresh marketable eggs in the shell command a high price and there is difficulty in meeting the demand for them; but large quantities of questionable eggs, often bought at very low prices, have been broken out for cooking purposes by disreputable firms, being preserved by freezing or drying until ready for use. Some dealers, however, manufacture a satisfactory product by the use of good eggs handled under proper conditions.

There is no objection to drying or freezing good eggs under proper sanitary conditions; in fact there are some advantages to be gained by preserving eggs in this manner, although the manufacturing processes devised by man, as a rule, do not improve the quality of nature's work. Conditions of modern life and commerce must, however, be met, and dried eggs or eggs in a frozen condition may be shipped long distances, and require less space for transportation and storage than do eggs in the shell.

As a result of investigations instituted by Secretary Wilson, the United States Department of Agriculture has recently issued two publications that give practical suggestions for correcting some of the existing practices and conditions which are at least partially responsible for the unsatisfactory products now found on the market. These publications are Bulletin 158 and Circular 98 of the Bureau of Chemistry, entitled respectively "A Bacteriological Study of Shell, Frozen and Desiccated Eggs" and "Practical Suggestions for the Preparation of Frozen and Dried Eggs."

CREAMERY BUTTER COMPOSITION.

A bulletin which should come in very useful in the event of a reconsideration of composition standards for butter, state or national, is Bulletin 149 of the Bureau of Animal Industry and is entitled "The Normal Composition of American Creamery Butter." The investigations described extended over a period of one year. Samples were secured from the product of 488 creameries scattered over fourteen of the principal dairy states of the union. In all 695 samples of creamery butter were analyzed, and the complete analysis of each, together with an outline of the churning record, is presented in tabular form in the bulletin.

The average composition of all the samples analyzed was 82.41 per cent. fat, 13.9 per cent. water, 2.51 per cent. salt and 1.18 per cent. curd. Only 4.9 per cent. of the samples showed a water content of 16 per cent. and over, but 9.1 per cent. contained less than 80 per cent. fat, 20.7 less than 81 per cent. and 38.5 less than 82 per cent. No conclusions of any kind are drawn in the bulletin from the information presented although some attempt is made to classify and compare the method of manufacture followed in the production of butters of varying percentages of butterfat: Thus three tables are given showing the average conditions under which butter containing (1) 84 per cent. fat or more; (2) 81 to 84 per cent. fat and (3) less than 81 per cent. fat, were churned. Of course it is rather dangerous to attempt to draw definite conclusions from averages of this kind since so many factors affect more or less the composition of a given churning of butter. However some comparisons from these three tables are interesting. There is little difference in the average fat content of the cream from which the three classes of butter was churned—less than 2 per cent. fat. It ranged from 28.04 per cent. for class 1 butters to 27.8 per cent. for class 3. The average acidity of the cream for each churning in each class was much the same, varying from .503 to .535 without relation to the composition of the butter. Neither was there much difference in the average temperatures in the three classes, and instead of being the highest in the making of the butters containing the least fat, the reverse was the case. The average for class 1 was 57.1 degrees; class 2, 56.8 degrees, and class 3, 56.6 degrees. There was little difference in the average length of churning time for butters in classes 1 and 2, the figures respectively being 46.1 and 45.9 minutes; but the average for class 3 was somewhat above these figures, being 53.6 minutes. The temperatures of wash waters averaged about the same in each class—57 degrees, as did the total number of revolutions the butter was worked. This was 20.8 for class 1, 19.94 for class 2 and 21.1 for class 3.

The most apparent variations in the average methods of manufacturing these three classes of butter seem to be in the size of granules when churning ceased and the number of churn revolutions butter was subjected to while in the wash water. The size of the butter granules was largest in class 3 butters, containing the least fat, and the revolutions in the wash water were also the greatest here. The average number was 19.4 for class 1; 14.2 for class 2 and 21.5 for class 3. This seems at least a pretty good indication of the importance of these two factors—size of granules and number of revolutions in wash water—in regulation of the composition of creamery butter.

THE BEST METHODS OF IMPROVING THE MILK SUPPLY.

The following paper was read before the American Association for the Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality by P. G. Heinemann, Ph. D. of the University of Chicago:

"The introduction of scientific methods in place of empirical methods has always provoked more or less opposition. There is perhaps no industry which has been held back by such opposition to a greater degree than the dairy industry, which is one of the oldest and one of the most useful to mankind. Sanitarians have attempted to improve dairy methods with moderate success chiefly by systematic inspection of the places of production and by bacteriological examinations of the products. The result has been a concentration of attention on cleanliness of production, prompt cooling, and keeping the milk cool up to the time of consumption. The number of bacteria in milk is usually taken as an index of cleanliness. Prompt cooling and keeping cool restricts multiplication, while cleanliness in production restricts the number which gain access.

"The presence of bacteria in milk interests us chiefly inasmuch as disease germs may enter in various ways. Sanitary means must therefore aim at reducing the number which enter during production or at destroying those which have gained access. The great majority of bacteria in milk are probably harmless, but frequently disease germs are present. These may be derived from the cow, the milker or from those handling the milk.

"There are some sanitarians who demand a perfect product. Milk for infant feeding may be either pasteurized or certified milk, good results having been obtained with both. It is claimed that certified milk is the only milk suitable for infants. But is certified milk always dependable? The supervision of dairies producing certified milk is carried on by medical milk commissions, who delegate inspectors and veterinarians to inspect the dairies at regular intervals. They delegate medical men to examine the employes to guard against the communication of infectious disease. These inspections, however, must take place at intervals of varying length and the control of conditions in the meantime rests with those in charge of the dairies. This is usually insufficient. Epidemics have occasionally been caused by certified milks. It is a stupendous or even impossible task to control conditions even on a certified milk farm to such an extent as to prevent occasional contamination with pathogenic organisms. Diseases of cows in initial stages, employes during the period of incubation of infectious diseases, germ carriers, all these factors must be considered. Only constant supervision by experts can bring about a reasonably certain feeling of safety. Medical milk commissions demand a milk with less than 10,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter and the total absence of disease germs. It is possible to obtain these results when new cows from unknown sources are constantly received in the herd and when new employes take the place of former ones at frequent intervals? We may safely assume that in the production of certified milk the chances of danger are materially reduced as compared with production of ordinary market milk. However, confidence in this kind of milk should not be over exaggerated.

"The difference in quality between certified milk and market milk is enormous. However, the most rapid advance in improving the milk supply must be obtained by developing present methods, especially since absolute ideals are at present unknown. Ayers and Johnson state boldly that efficiently pasteurized milk is equal to certified milk from a bacteriological standpoint, and so far chemists and clinicians have failed to show that, from their standpoints, pasteurized milk is inferior to certified milk. The upshot of the matter is that demands have been forced upon producers of certified milk which are often extreme and sometimes superfluous. Consequently certified milk is so far superior to ordinary market milk that the latter is greatly neglected, the ideal being considered unattainable by many producers. Under the present system of supervision of certified milk farms much attention is paid to certain phases of production, while others suffer from inattention. Pasteurized milk is often condemned because the present methods of pasteurization are not perfect, and on other grounds which still lack proof. Without pasteurization the only choice lies between ordinary market milk and certified milk. Much education is needed before it will be possible to improve our present supplies so as to render them relatively safe, since market milk sometimes contains the germs of infectious diseases and certified milk cannot be always shown to be free from these infections.

"The germs which are the etiological agents of infantile intestinal troubles have been the subject of much scientific investigation, but up to the present time little positive knowledge has been acquired. We can, therefore, reduce the chances of infection only by reducing the total number of bacteria in milk in the expectation of removing or preventing access of dangerous germs together with harmless forms. The attainment of this object is sought by pasteurization or the production of milk under strict sanitary supervision. Both methods are still in their infancy and much improvement is necessary before they will prove efficient.

"Milk which is to be pasteurized should not be produced carelessly, as is done occasionally. Milk, of fairly good quality should be used, and by inspection of the producing dairies this object can be attained without making excessive demands on the producer. If this milk is kept below 50 degrees F. it will be in good condition for pasteurization. The continuous method of pasteurization has been shown to be inefficient and should be condemned. The holding process has many advantages and is reliable. Quite recently it has been suggested that milk be bottled before pasteurization and then pasteurized in a similar way as beer is pasteurized. The bottles are hung on wires or placed in wire baskets and passed through water of moderate temperature at first, and then passed through warmer water until a temperature of 145 degrees F. is reached. Here the bottles are held for twenty or thirty minutes. The great advantage of this system is the fact that no handling is required after pasteurization so that contamination is avoided. The possibility of contaminating the milk with disease germs after pasteurization is also avoided by this method. For this process it has been suggested to use bottles with narrow necks like beer bottles and cover them with caps such as are generally used for beer bottles. There is no difficulty in cleansing these bottles, as has been advanced, since machinery for this purpose is now on the market. It seems to me that this method of pasteurizing is destined to take the place of all other methods. It is economical and yields a safe product.

"The production of certified milk has received much attention during recent years. There are now more than 70 milk commissions in this country, which exercise control over the supply of certified milk. As intimated, however, there is much room for improvement in various ways, improvements both of positive and negative character. Demands on the dairies have been exaggerated so as to increase the cost of production unnecessarily. Regulations for feeding cows are too exacting. These regulations should not go beyond demanding clean and healthful fodder, for it has shown that each breed of cows produces a characteristic quality of milk, which cannot be altered materially by variations of food, unless the change affects the general health of the animal. The construction of the stables is made a special feature in contracts with milk commissions. Cement floors are to be preferred to wood floors, to be sure, but some dairies have produced milk fully equal to certified milk, with relatively inferior equipment as to floors and general construction of stables. In some contracts between milk producers and commissions even the architectural style of the building has been made the subject of regulation.

Ventilation, light, temperature and other factors surely contribute to the health and comfort of the cows, but should not be made the subject of exacting conditions. Inspectors who are employed by milk commissions or by health authorities should be high class men, who do not score dairies according to certain rule of thumb ideas, but who are sufficiently familiar with the subject to use discretion. Producers have frequently been discouraged by indiscreet inspectors.

"The consequence of these exacting demands has been that many certified milk dairies have large capitals invested. The cost of production is naturally high and the purchasing price beyond the reach of the majority of the population. We find here again, as in many other instances that the ideal is placed almost beyond reach under present conditions, so that the true benefit derived is not as great as it would be if more conservative methods were practiced. The beneficial moral influence of certified milk on the production of market milk would be enhanced if its production were made feasible for the man with small capital.

"It has been demonstrated that milk equal to certified milk, or nearly so, can be produced by an investment of small capital. Cement floors can be laid by an enterprising farmer with his regular help, thus reducing the expense to the cost of the material. A frame building of ordinary construction can be kept clean by care and attention. The cows are as easily kept in a good sanitary condition as horses, which receive considerable care at the hand of farmers, although they are used for work and not for the production of a universal article of food. Vacuum cleaners are now used in some certified milk dairies, and although the results seem satisfactory, it is a question whether this mode of cleaning cows is of material advantage. Cold water from a well is available on almost all farms and can be used largely in place of ice. There are farms in existence where milk of the highest grade is produced and where the original investment is less than two thousand dollars.

"If dairy inspectors were to pay closer attention to methods employed in milk production rather than to construction of stables, of floors, of mangers, of bottling machinery, etc., the result would be gratifying. To change existing stables, bottling rooms, stanchions and other fixtures involves expenditure of money. Improvement of methods, increased vigilance and care cost but little and may be applied by any one. Clean methods are more highly responsible for improvement of the product than expensive buildings and machinery.

"Certified milk is usually shipped in boxes, the bottles being covered with chipped ice. This is also a source of considerable expense. Still this is necessary as long as railroads use the ordinary type of car for the milk traffic. Well built refrigerator cars, which have been introduced by some railroads will keep the milk cold until delivered to the distributing agent, and here another improvement is necessary, namely, to provide delivery wagons with sufficient capacity for ice to keep the milk cold until delivered to the consumer. If all railroads were to use an improved type of car and ice it properly the expense would not be more than one thirty second of a cent per quart. If the supply comes from a great distance, trains should be run on a faster schedule than is customary at present."

BACTERIA AND ICE CREAM.

The dairy bacteriologist of the Iowa Experiment station, B. W. Hammer, has just made his first report of his extensive work in the study of ice creams. It deals with the question whether or not it is practical to set up a bacterial standard for ice creams, as has been done in many places with milk.

Upon this point the report says that it cannot be positively stated now how such a standard is practical. The report says that the investigations made at the Experiment station at Ames indicate that as cleanliness in the manufacture of ice cream increases, the number of bacteria decreases. He also found from experience in the large manufacturing plant of the dairy department of Iowa State college that it is possible to make ice cream in quantities up to 20 gallons with a low bacterial count without expensive methods. As to large factory conditions Mr. Hammer is not certain. He also found that when ice cream is properly hardened, its bacterial count will not increase in storage.

Generally commercial ice cream contains very large numbers of bacteria. In a study made of Philadelphia ice creams the count ranges from 79,000 to 79,800,000 per cubic centimeter; in Boston the average of 35 samples was 23,000,000; in Milwaukee one sample was found to contain 8,000,000,000 per cubic centimeter while the lowest sample contained an average of 200,000. In Iowa 10 samples taken in Des Moines contained an average of 19,920,000 per cubic centimeter; the count of the college manufactured ice cream showed a range of 500,000 to 72,000,000. Upon this question of the number of bacteria Mr. Hammer says in his report:

"Although a few million additional organisms may be present in each cubic centimeter of ice cream without causing the consumer any harm in the great majority of cases, the realization that a low bacterial count means a clean method of production in the case of any food product is becoming more and more widespread.

"There is no increase in the number of bacteria during the storage of ice cream. This statement assumes, of course, that the product is kept properly hardened."

ICE CREAM FAT STANDARD.

From the Pacific Dairy Review: "As a result of the fact that a number of states have enacted laws relating to honesty in the production of ice cream, it seems that certain interests engaged in its manufacture are bent on destroying such laws by contesting their constitutionality and by preventing their further enactment. We agree that the tendency to regulate private affairs by law is going pretty far in this country and that people who are buncoed through their ignorance should not insist that the law protect them in everything. The fact remains, however, that the government has started to assume such duties and if other manufacturers of foods must toe the legal mark ice cream manufacturers should be no exception. In the production of ice cream it is assumed that cream is used. Honest manufacturers use cream and those who do not use it should find some other name for their product. If strawberry jam must have strawberries, tomato catsup tomatoes and apple butter apples, then ice cream should have cream in it and the dairymen who have to live up to the law in the milk and cream they sell, the butter they make and so on, should insist that ice cream makers shall not make two, three or five gallons of cream out of one they buy from the dairyman."

WHAT THE SCHOOLS REALLY MEAN.

According to Professor H. E. Van Norman, of the Pennsylvania State College, nearly 400 young men took courses in dairying at the college last year, and most of them are working on farms, either for themselves or for some one else. It is such items as this, remarks the Creamery and Milk Plant Monthly, that give the greatest promise for the dairy industry, far more than reports of increased consumption, widening markets, fresh pastures, new uses for creamery and dairy products. The time has arrived for intensive dairying as well as intensive farming generally. We ought not to rest until we can wipe out the fact that the soils of Europe, cultivated for thousands of years, are to-day twice as productive as the virgin soil of America, or that the naturally poor little country of Switzerland is the most celebrated producer of butter and cheese. The time will come after many hundreds and thousands of men shall have graduated from the agricultural colleges and carried the knowledge there gained home to be employed on their or other people's lands and stock, barns, dairies and creameries. The individual dairyman may gather experience—one man's experience. The college man gets the experience of the whole world, classified and systematized; that is science.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY BY STATES.

The last figures furnished by the Department of Agriculture from the United States Census Bureau on numbers of dairy cows in each state are interesting when one considers the claims made by different states as to the figure they cut in the dairy industry. In the government figures New York is given credit with having 1,508,672 cows and 438,124 calves, while Wisconsin is shown to have 1,471,591 cows and 449,489 calves and just 36,081 cows under the Empire state and 11,364 calves over. Iowa has 1,404,419 cows and 567,991 calves. Iowa takes a high percentage of increase in breeding. Minnesota and Illinois loom up in the million cattle class.

LIVE-STOCK SAVES SOIL FERTILITY.

It is a well known fact that wherever live stock is kept, farms remain in a higher state of fertility. Feeding crops to animals does not take away the fertility from the soil nearly so rapidly as when the grain is sold. Moreover livestock farming requires that a variety of crops be raised and this means crop rotation. Clover, alfalfa or some other leguminous crop is usually raised when animals are kept on the farm. These crops have a very beneficial effect on the soil, increasing the organic matter, adding nitrogen to it and at the same time furnishing a rich feeding stuff for all kinds of livestock. Professor G. C. Humphrey in a recent address made the following remarks regarding live-stock farming and soil fertility.

"The farmer who owns a rich, fertile farm and keeps as many productive animals, of two or more classes, as the farm will support is in a position to enjoy a lifetime of continued prosperity and to leave his sons a goodly heritage. Too often men fail to enjoy such prosperity and do not leave their sons the splendid heritage of a fertile farm.

"Without any intention of doing wrong, many farmers have enjoyed a limited degree of prosperity at the expense of those who are to farm their fields after them. This has been accomplished by the continued growth and marketing of farm crops to such an extent that the soil fertility has become exhausted and the farms have been practically worn out. A retired farmer once, when invited to attend an agricultural meeting boastfully remarked, 'There isn't much any one can teach me about farming. I have lived long enough to wear out three farms and I doubt if many men have had any more experience than I.' As a result of this kind of farming, many farms which were once fertile and productive, are, to-day, too poor and unproductive to offer any inducement to any one to own and operate them.

MODERN FARMING.

The great body of farmers in the United States, remarks Hoard's Dairyman, has learned its trade from the conditions and methods that prevailed fifty years ago. Take it in the Middle West, for instance. Fifty years ago the land was abundantly supplied with fertility, it was not sour and all crops grew and yielded abundantly. Consequently prices were low. New land was constantly coming under the plow. A set of ideas and practices was established then in regard to farm management that does not fit the changed conditions of to-day. The land through constant cropping has lost much of its productive power. Very much of it has become too acid to grow clover or alfalfa well. It is safe to say that not one farmer in five hundred has ever tested his soil with litmus paper which is a very simple operation.

The old time ideas paid no attention to fertilizing beyond what barnyard manure was made and that was very unintelligently handled. The old time farmer did not like the confinement of dairy farming. The poison of loose, slipshod ideas of grain farming was still in his blood. To be tied down to studious, scientific ideas, to be controlled by rigid business methods, to make a thorough, practical study of farming was distasteful to the great body of farmers.

But under the guidance of their ideas, their farms and themselves were constantly growing poorer. Then there was the troublesome fact that the cost of living was yearly becoming more expensive. Children were demanding education and more money was needed on every side. The cost of hired help has doubled in fifty years. Modern ideas as taught in the colleges of agriculture and demonstrated by advanced skillful farmers said: "You must change your methods to fit the changed conditions of things. You must master these new ideas that science teaches. You must learn how to feed your soil; how to breed better farm animals, how to feed and handle your live-stock better. There is not sufficient revenue in your present ideas of farm management."

Now all this found the average farmer poorly prepared to meet the situation. He had not trained his mind to look into and understand these modern ideas. A good illustration of this is the silo. See how long it has taken the general run of farmers to accept the silo as an aid to better profits. It has taken thirty years of constant preaching right here in the best dairy districts of Wisconsin to get the farmers to adopt it, and a large portion of them are not converted yet. The trouble is that the average farmer is not a reader and a student. It takes too long to convince him of the better way. He is convinced only by what he sees and that takes a long time. The silo is only one of the many better things that modern farming is trying to bring about so as to stop this waste of soil, of time and labor that is going on. If the farmer would only pay more attention to his mind, enlarge his range of ideas, take in more of what science has to teach him, he would vastly improve his fortune. Every improvement that has come to him, every new and better idea or method has been the contribution of men of thought and experimentation who make large use of the mind as well as of the hands. Right here is where modern farming differs from the farming of half a century ago. It is simply a question of more light, and a farmer who is prepared to take advantage of the light.

POTATOES DIET FOR THE POOR.

The Agricultural Chamber of the Rhine province in Germany, has just published statistics which afford a striking corroboration of a statement made recently by a socialist in the Reichstag to the effect that potatoes are the chief diet of the poorer classes in large sections of Germany. The Agricultural Chamber which is legally constituted to gather information for the government on agricultural subjects, has been studying how the peasantry lives. It publishes the family budget of thirty peasant families with annual incomes ranging between $471 and $290. About two-thirds had the higher figure and owned small farms of ten to forty-seven acres. It was found that the average daily consumption of potatoes of the thirty families was nearly three and one-third pounds for each person, whereas the consumption of meat was less than three ounces; of butter one and thirteen hundredth ounces and slightly more than one pint of milk of which nearly half was skim milk or buttermilk.

The most important article of diet after potatoes was bread, of which each person consumed nearly fourteen and two-third ounces daily, besides four ounces of flour. The only other article of food mentioned in the report was eggs, of which each person ate one about every fourth day. ♦

It must be mentioned for the proper appreciation of these figures that the Rhine province is one of the richest agricultural provinces in Germany and that the residents are far from being the poorest people in Germany. For example, a labor paper has just been publishing the family budgets of Silesian miners, which show that they eat almost no meat at all and the small quantity consumed is chiefly horse flesh.

FOOD COMBINATIONS.

Persons with weak digestion should not, as a rule, eat fruits and vegetables together; that is, at the same meal, says Health in the Household. Neither should they eat fat or fried food. Fruits and cereals are best suited for the morning and evening meals. Fruits should be eaten at the beginning rather than at the end of a meal. Most vegetables are better when eaten at the midday meal. Cereals and fruits are better suited for cold than warm weather. Potatoes and some other foods when baked will digest in much less time than when boiled or fried. All grains and vegetables should be thoroughly cooked, especially green fruit and vegetables. Tomatoes do well with almost everything except fruit. The time required for digestion depends much on how food is cooked. Nuts and coffee ground together (in a coffee mill) make a good food combination, and may be eaten with milk. Many of the highest authorities on dietetics and hygiene claim that all condiments, salt, spices, vinegar, etc., are not nutritious and retard digestion, being mostly irritants and stimulants.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The Nebraska Experiment station speaking from experience with its state conditions concludes, in a bulletin recently issued, that it is safer for corn growers to use their local seed rather than try imported seed. Five varieties of prize winning corn at the National Dairy Show, produced in Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, when planted in the Nebraska station, yielded at the rate of 39.8 bushels per acre; five varieties of corn from different parts of the state yielded 45.6 bushels per acre; while seven local varieties from near the station produced 48.8 bushels per acre.

The New York State Food Commission reports that trading stamps have increased the cost of living three per cent., says Up-To-Date. Yes, we have known that for some time, but in many cases it is more than three per cent. In Philadelphia some years ago a chain of stores sold a small bottle of blue for 3 cents, now they give extra stamps and it sells for five cents. Eight pounds of starch was sold for 25 cents, now it's five cents per pound with extra stamps, and so on down the line. In many cases the extra stamp evil almost doubles the cost of living.

After a series of experiments conducted in the Michigan State Board of Health laboratory, Dr. M. L. Holm, state bacteriologist, has discovered a simple and efficient method of sterilizing bottles and other articles used in handling milk. A bleaching powder is the principal ingredient. The State Dairy and Food commission will investigate the bleaching powders sold in the various cities of the state in an effort to learn the standard of the powder. Dr. Holm's experiments were suggested by statements made by Lansing Milkmen that they could not afford to install expensive machinery in order that the bottles and pails be made sterile.

Milk cans in the vicinity of Eureka, Cal., which State Dairy Inspector Samuel E. Watson condemned as unclean will not be used any more. Commissioner Watson in making his rounds of creamery stations recently, took an ax along and chopped up every rusty or dirty can he could find.

An Altoona woman recently partook of canned salmon and after eating it became slightly ill. She did not believe the salmon had anything to do with her illness and the next day having recovered made a meal of the remainder of the fish. She became violently ill and despite the efforts of several of the city's most prominent physicians died in great agony of ptomaine poisoning.

The pig is one of the best sources of revenue on any farm, and especially on a dairy farm. He requires comparatively little care, converts anything from swill to pasture into meat and just now he commands an exceptionally high price. What is more he grows into money so fast that even the tax collector can't always catch him, as he is often farrowed, raised and cashed in between the annual visits of that official.

It has been proven in Denmark that the supply of milk increases with the coming of winter. Some people argue that this favors the feeding of ensilage and that winter conditions are better for producing milk as a general proposition. The same thing occurs in different parts of this country. The apparent difference is that people in the fluid milk producing districts allow more of their cows to freshen in the winter as compared with the summer months.

Reports received from Texas and Louisiana show that all records have been broken this year in the production of spanish peanuts in Texas. The Louisiana crop will not be as heavy as last year, when it was greater than the crop in Texas. The acreage devoted to peanuts has been increased in Texas each year for the past five years, and now it is greater than at any previous time.

Ice Cream Journal: If any manufacturer takes pride in his goods he must be insistent about clean raw products. If he is not adamant on this subject he can never produce quality goods. The man who is particular has a selling argument that transcends all others, and he should not hesitate to take full advantage of it. This will force his rival to be particular and thus the quality of the product sold will be higher in that city, which will do the industry a world of good. In an advertisement the first stress should be laid on clean and wholesome raw cream and the second on the sanitary plant. That's how important the writer considers the first requisite. The most perfect ice cream factory in the country cannot guarantee quality from stale, sour or dirty cream. No amount of bombast in personal selling or advertising can overcome that handicap. This being a fact indisputable, it behooves every ice cream manufacturer to see to it that he is getting quality cream and milk.

According to the American Food Journal the markets of Irkutsk, Siberia, are an interesting sight, for the products offered for sale are in most cases frozen. Fish are piled up in stacks like so much cordwood, and meat likewise. All kinds of fowls are similarly frozen and piled up. Some animals brought into the market whole are propped up on their legs and have the appearance of being actually alive. But, stranger yet, even the liquids are frozen solid and sold in blocks. Milk is frozen into a block in this way, and with a string or stick frozen into and projecting from it. This, it is said, is for the convenience of the purchaser, who is thus enabled to carry his milk by the string or stick handle.

Chocolate is a good sustaining food, sweetmeat and stimulant, containing as it does from 27 to 60 per cent. of sugar, 20 to 45 per cent. of fat, 2 or 3 per cent. of mineral matter and about 0.75 per cent. of theobromine, say the Lancet, London. A fair meal for an invalid may be made of a pint of milk and 4 ounces of chocolate which yield about 800 calories. Notwithstanding the disparaging things that have been said recently about chocolate, practical experience has decided the value of the well made article. It contains all the elements necessary for a food: Fat, Carbohydrates, proteins and mineral salts, including a notable proportion of potassium phosphate. On account of its staying powers and nutritive properties it has been largely used in the army manoeuvres and other cases where exceptional demands are made upon the muscular, nervous and mental energies, such as expeditions to the polar regions.

Recent investigation by English scientists has shown that milk low in butterfat sours much more quickly than milk of a good average quality.

The Blue Valley Bulletin, a monthly publication devoted to advancing the dairy interests, came out in a new shape with the August issue. The Bulletin is full of useful information to the dairy farmer and for that matter to the farmer in general. The Bulletin is now 24 pages 6½ by 10 and is more convenient to handle than the old form.

The deteriorating influence of light on milk is well known. Hence the custom of keeping milk in dark rooms, shutting out the sun, etc. It is claimed that if milk is placed in bottles of red glass it will remain fresh much longer than if kept in the ordinary bottles. Take a white bottle and wrap it in red tissue paper and the milk can stand in the sun for ten hours without deteriorating, it is claimed.

The Milwaukee County School of Agriculture and Domestic Science is being started with an equipment costing $300,000. Its course of instruction includes dairying, creamery operation, sanitary milk production and silo construction. Special attention has been given to the dairy department, which has a creamery building costing $27,000 without equipment, and a complete dairy farm with a model barn.

The German Agricultural society arranges annual ocean voyages in connection with expositions, for the purpose of testing the stability of dairy and other food articles which are intended to keep for prolonged periods in all sorts of conditions. The voyage takes four months, going from Bremen to Australia and back and crossing the equator twice. Upon their return the goods are tested in Bremen by judges and scientists.

The Dairy Record: "Inspector Johnson, of the Minnesota Dairy and Food Department, says he finds rats in the cream sent to the centralizers in the Twin Cities. We expect any day to see the genial Secretary of the Northwestern Shippers' Association come out with the statement in the papers to the effect that rats in cream do not injure the butter, and that little rat is just what is needed to distinguish 'genuine' butter from oleomargarine. Great is the cream shipping system."

New York until recently the leading cheese making state of the union, bought more than a million pounds of cheese from Wisconsin in 1911, according to statistics covering more than three-fourths of the cheese shipments from the state gathered by the agricultural economics department of the Department of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin. Millions of pounds were sent to Texas, Florida, Virginia, Massachusetts, Ohio, Nebraska and other states. Illinois took over 15,000,000 pounds, Missouri 8,000,000, Texas 7,500,000, Georgia 5,500,000 while a number of other states each bought more than 3,000,000 pounds of Wisconsin cheese.

Two tons of western creamery butter which internal revenue agents said was adulterated in that it contained more than 40 per cent. of water has been found in possession of commission houses in Buffalo. It is claimed the stuff has been retailing to the unsuspecting public at top prices. According to the newspaper reports the butter was not seized by the federal authorities but notice was served on the holders that it must be reworked so that the water is removed.

Marketable milk in Chicago is to be sold as one of two grades, "inspected" or "pasteurized." The former can be furnished by dairies only to which city health department officials give scores of 65 or more points out of a possible 100 on equipment and methods. These points cover the condition, health, comfort, feeding and watering of the cows, the condition of the milk rooms, stable and utensils and the handling of the cows and the milk from its first production to its storing and transportation. Before June 30, 1913, producers must file certificates showing that their cows have been inspected by a competent veterinarian and are free from tuberculosis and other infectious diseases. Milk produced in dairies scoring below 65 and above 55 points must be pasteurized. All milk shipped into the city must be kept at a temperature at least 60 degrees and after June 1, 1914, at a temperature not higher than 55 degrees. On January 1, 1915, the score for dairies producing inspected milk will be raised to 70. Maximum bacterial counts are established for both grades of milk and no milk failing the requirements of one of the two grades will be permitted on sale in Chicago.

By grafting the Jaconda strawberry plant on the Mariboro raspberry, J. C. Wagner, living near Denver, has produced a fruit that tastes somewhat like both raspberry and strawberry, resembles a red raspberry in shape, and is the size of a strawberry.

The federal government appears to have grown firmer in its determination to prosecute offenders of the pure foods act and bring about a more perfect system of food distribution.

It is said that Uncle Sam has his eye anew on the milk question in Chicago. It is said that a deep investigation will be ordered concerning the methods of milk associations in the city and vicinity through which it has been intimated that the price of milk has been fixed.

There were 1,620,766,000 pounds of butter, valued at $405,000,000, produced on farms and in factories in the United States during the census year 1909. Of the grand total reported, the quantity produced on farms was 996,001,000 valued at $225,544,000. Factories produced 624,765,000 pounds, valued at $179,510,000. Butter manufactured by farmers' co-operative creameries is included in the figures, for factories. Among the states Wisconsin ranked first, Iowa ranked second, Minnesota third, Pennsylvania fourth, Michigan fifth, Ohio sixth, Illinois seventh, New York eighth and Texas ninth. Texas, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois and Indiana show a much greater farm production than factory output, and rank in the order written. Minnesota, Iowa and New York, in the order named, rank after Wisconsin in showing a factory production much larger than credited to their farms.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association is to make a united effort to stamp out the practice among manufacturers of subsidizing jobbers' salesmen, or offering them special inducements to push certain goods. One of the paramount objects of the association is to have business conducted on legitimate lines.

Of the known acreage of potatoes in the United States and the condition of the crop reported for September 1, it is estimated that the yield will be about 398,000,000 bushels. This will be 105,000,000 bushels more than last year's production of 293,000,000 bushels and 49,000,000 bushels more than the harvest of 1910. In other terms, the increase is equivalent to more than one bushel for every man, woman and child in the United States.

Seven hundred druggists associated in Chicago have concluded that manufacturers must commensurately pay them for store or window displays, and the manufacturers are doing so.

September registered the highest price in fifty years for live cattle. An eleven cent level was reached in Chicago, showing an annual average advance of ten per cent. for the last decade.

A few years ago in the United States cotton seed was used to fill up swamp holes or was thrown into the streams. Now it is made to yield one hundred and twenty-five million dollars a year.

Frozen salmon packed in the Port, Oregon, district last year weighed nearly 7,250,000 pounds, one schooner equipped with cold storage catching over 1,000,000 pounds of salmon.

A free grant of 100 to 200 acres of forest land is made by the Canadian government, on the simple condition of residence and cultivation, to any settler over eighteen years of age, in the provinces of New Brunswick and Ontario, and 160 acres of land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Yukon, and some parts of British Columbia.

AN END OF DOUBTFUL THINGS.

The people of Pennsylvania are looking forward with eager anticipation to the Legislature now in session for speedy relief from many long-standing evils. Of course expectations have been aroused respecting possible amendment to the general food law, enacted at the session of 1909. While this act was a decided improvement upon its predecessors, there is a general belief that it is capable of amendment in certain directions.

For one thing, it is quite clear that public opinion is setting in quite heavily against the use of chemical preservatives in articles of food. The controversy began several years ago but it has never been settled and there is little reason to suppose that all manufacturers and consumers will occupy the same ground for years to come. It is true that many well-known houses have discontinued the use of chemical preservatives, if they ever used them, and it is now considered a valuable trade asset.

At present the Pennsylvania law permits the use of sulphur dioxide and benzoate of soda in certain articles in limited quantities. When the act was framed the decision of the board of experts appointed by President Roosevelt had legitimized the use of benzoate of soda in any quantity in the federal jurisdiction. The clamor for recognition of this fact by the several states led to the insertion of the permissive clause. It is evident, however, that public sentiment favors the entire prohibition of all chemical preservatives.

The thoughtful householder long ago came to the conclusion that when the effect of any preservative upon the human stomach or the other organs of the body is a matter of doubtful utility the wise man will abstain from its use. When in doubt it is always safe to give yourself the benefit of the doubt. As it has been shown quite conclusively that chemical preservatives are not necessary to the preservation of food products, and as it has been shown that they may be used to conceal inferior or decayed products, the people will applaud legislative action looking to their elimination. It is the general belief that the law should absolutely prohibit their use and the condition of the public temper is such as to demand recognition. The sooner the chemical preservative vanishes the better for the consumer.

MAKING PROGRESS SLOWLY.

The operations of the Dairy and Food Bureau during the year 1912 were characterized by considerable activity and the results are very satisfactory. It has not been the policy of the Bureau to act as a detective agent or an urgent and unrelenting prosecutor of dealers who, either consciously or unconsciously, have violated the provisions of any of the food laws of the Commonwealth. At the same time the agents of the Bureau have been instructed to be vigilant and active in the performance of their duties and continued efforts have been made to rid the state of adulterated, misbranded or decayed food. The record of the year's work shows that these efforts have been crowned with success and it is probable that less unfit food is now offered for sale than at any previous period in the history of the state.

During the term of the present Dairy and Food Commissioner special emphasis has been laid upon the educational feature of the work of the Division. Many articles have been prepared for the Bulletin, the purpose of which was to rouse the consumer to greater carefulness in the purchase of food. The disposition to provide adulterated, misbranded or unwholesome food products has been directly catered to by the general desire among householders for cheap food products and the great carelessness in making purchases. Some heads of families seem to be utterly indifferent to the ordinary rules of cleanliness and culinary decency; the important item with them is cheapness. Under such circumstances it is not to be wondered at that some unscrupulous manufacturers seek to cater to the sort of demand they meet in the market.

Nevertheless, improvement has been made each year and the people who purchase the family supplies are becoming more and more critical. Perhaps in time the general public will recognize the supreme importance of pure food and insist upon obtaining it. In the meantime the Dairy and Food Division will endeavor to enforce the laws, not in any vindictive or persecuting spirit, but with the sole purpose of enforcing the decrees of the Legislature and protecting consumers from injury. It is a satisfaction to know that the record of the year has never been surpassed, and that the prospects are excellent for the amendment of the general food law in such manner as will make an end of the legal use of all chemical preservatives, the effects of which upon the human system are doubtful, to say the least.

THE COST OF PRODUCING MILK.

The people of cities who complain about the high price of milk may be interested in knowing what it costs to produce and distribute good marketable milk. An investigation made by the Dairy Department of the College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, shows that the average cost of producing a gallon of milk in Ohio is about 25 cents or 6.25 cents per quart, allowing about 3,200 pounds per cow per year as the the average milk production. This takes into consideration the cost of feeds, labor, interest on investments, insurance, taxes, etc. When the average milk production per cow is increased the cost is decreased. The average cost of distribution is three and a half cents per quart, making a total of 9.75 per quart as the cost of producing milk and delivering it. This means that when milk retails at ten cents a quart the average producer is making little or no profit on the transaction. Where high producing cows are kept and economic methods of handling and distributing on a large scale are employed the above figures are greatly reduced and there is a fair profit in the dairy business. However it is the average producer who keeps average cows, the increasing cost of feeds and labor and the greater demands for sanitary conditions that are contributing to the high cost of milk.

EAT CANDY AND BE WARM.

A well-known medical authority advises people to eat candy in the winter months to keep warm. He says candy is fattening and is healthful, used in moderation. He says further, better still, the man who will eat sweets of some kind will not resort to such unwise steps as smoking more than usual and taking a little more alcohol than is his custom. So many people when they have become chilled and ill-tempered take a drink of whiskey to warm them up. Soon afterward they wonder why the weather has become colder. Of course, the weather has done nothing of the kind. It is simply the reaction of the alcohol which, as soon as the pleasant momentary sensation has passed, leaves one colder even than one was before taking the alcohol. Now, if these people had eaten a few chocolates during the day, they probably would not have wanted the alcohol. Everyone knows, or ought to know, that sugar is a fine heat raiser. Chocolate has certain nutritive qualities apart from the sugar it contains, and no one can take a better sweetmeat than good plain chocolate. It would be far better for people who smoke a cigarette before breakfast to substitute sweets for the tobacco. Tobacco kills the appetite far more than do sweet things.

KEEPING TOMATOES FRESH UNTIL CHRISTMAS.

A Maryland newspaper has the following article on the above subject:

"By practical experiment it has been ascertained by some of the farmers of the country that green tomatoes picked at this season of the year (October) wrapped in tissue paper, placed in a dark and dry place can be kept until the middle of January, and even later, and then ripen. Several of the farmers throughout the county, it is said tried this experiment this year, and had ripe fruit on their tables on New Year's day. The temperature where the tomatoes are placed must not be too severe and must be dry. If such were not the case during the freezes of December, the tomatoes, covered with moisture from the damp cellar, would become chilled and as a consequence would in a short time decay.

"If the experiments of the many who are going to try and see how long they can keep them comes through successfully, next season nearly all of the tomato growers in Sussex will likely house large quantities after the close of the canneries, so that if the fruit is successfully kept they may be able to realize big prices for them during the winter season. For years it has been the custom of many of the farmers of the eastern part of the county to gather watermelons at the end of the season and place them in hay mows and under stacks of fodder, and at the Christmas times bring them out and feast upon them; but the idea of keeping tomatoes firm and have them in a ripened state in this section in the winter time during the holidays is something that was not dreamed of until a year or two ago and therefore it is an entirely new thing to the masses of the growers.

INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT MEAT.

J. F. Horine, statistician of the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company, is authority for the following remarks on the subject of cattle scarcity:

"If anything more than the census figures were needed to prove the scarcity of beef cattle in the country, and that the law of supply and demand governs prices at market, it was furnished recently in the sale of numerous shipments of beef steers on the Chicago market for $10 to $10.50 per hundred pounds, the highest prices paid since civil war times, more than forty-five years ago.

"In fact while the cattle supply has been declining, the population has been forging ahead by leaps and bounds from both natural increase and immigration, so that the demand is now much greater than the supply, and present high prices are the natural result.

"As it will take from three to five years to build up a new supply, at the very best possible rate and under the most favorable conditions, an abundance of beef at reasonably cheap prices need not be looked for for several years to come. Certainly no more favorable opportunity have those who are fortunate enough to have the breeding stock and to be prepared to raise cattle and furnish them for market.

"In the meantime, the only possible solution of the problem of how to avoid a beef famine during the next five to ten years is for corn belt farmers to breed and raise more cattle, build more silos, and raise more corn with which to fill them, together with alfalfa, which can be grown successfully in most sections of the corn belt. Such a course not only holds abundant money profits for corn belt cattle raisers, but also offers preservation of soil fertility, without which no system of agriculture can remain profitable or long endure.

"The summing up of the whole cattle situation is this: (1) That there is a world shortage of cattle, and cheap beef is thing of the past; (2) that the farmers and stock raisers of the United States have nothing to fear in the way of cattle or beef competition from either Mexico, Canada or South America for the next decade or longer; (3) that henceforth the corn belt farms must be looked to more than ever before for our domestic beef supply, or else the American people must face a beef famine; (4) that to save the calves and raise more and better cattle on their farms is not only a duty which corn belt farmers owe to their country, but also a necessity for prevention of the decline of the fertility of their own lands; and (5) that by buying foundation herds of good grade cows and pure bred bulls, or pure bred animals of both sexes, at the present relatively very low cost of such breeding stock, which owing to cessation of range demand, is almost on a level with beef prices, together with economical, improved methods of beef production, involving the raising of more corn, the building of silos for both winter and summer use, and the raising of alfalfa—such a course can be made to pay a large annual net profit on an average through a series of years, and confer greater and more lasting benefits upon both producer and public than any other now presented to the corn belt farmers.

"During the last five years there has been a series of alternating seasons of overmarketing and withholding from market of live stock and because of such overmarketing warnings of an impending shortage have been largely discredited until recently.

"The inevitable consequence of these successive seasons of overmarketing, especially of immature stock, is an acute shortage at market not only in numbers, but also in meat making capacity, while the demand from consumers has been liberal, since all classes are employed and the country fairly prosperous.

"The result of this combinations of factors is seen, not only in the growing scarcity, but also in the high prices paid for cattle, and very high prices for hogs and sheep also, during the late spring and early summer months, with no prospect of much lower prices at any time during the remainder of the present year.

"Now, overmarketing is no evidence of overproduction. Yet the presence of so many animals on the market during the seasons of overmarketing mentioned above has led many persons, even dealers, who are supposed to be well informed of the facts of the situation in all their bearings, to suppose that the country was well supplied with live stock, when as a matter of fact there was a growing shortage in the country as proven by later developments at market.

"The decline of live stock raising, especially in the north central states, has resulted not only in forcing consumers to pay higher prices for meats, etc., but has also injured the fertility of the soil, an era of grain crop growing and marketing, succeeding an era of live stock raising, having depleted the soil, which at the same time is being deprived of the manure which stock raising would furnish."

WHEN SALEM WAS THE "PEPPER PORT."

Up to half a century ago Salem, Mass., was known the world over as the "pepper port." It was at Salem that the first cargo of pepper brought to America was landed. This was in 1795, and Jonathan Carnes, of Salem, commanded the ship. It is said that Captain Carnes heard of the big profits of pepper while on one of his East Indian trips, says the Spice Mill, and discovered that the trade was confined mostly to Padang. He promptly sailed for that port and took on a cargo, but was wrecked on the return voyage and lost both ship and cargo.

Nothing daunted he built another ship after reaching Salem, this being named the Rajah. It was a brig of 130 tons, and the captain sailed away in it for Padang in 1795. Finding the pepper market pretty well cornered by that time by the French and Dutch traders he boldly pushed north, navigating uncharted waters from port to port. He returned to Salem with a cargo of pepper which cost him less than $18,000, but which was sold for $144,000. Where he had collected this lucrative shipload was kept a profound secret by Captain Carnes.

Captain Ropes, of the Recovery, was the next to locate the headquarters of the pepper supply and to bring a cargo to Salem in November, 1802. The Recovery was also the first American vessel to enter the harbor of Mocha, in the Red sea, and open the American trade in coffee.

It is a significant fact to read of the many places explored by ships that sailed from the port of Salem and to note that to-day the old town is dropped from the commerce of nations. From the "pepper port" sailed the first American ship to trade with Hindustan, Java and Japan, and Salem ships and Salem captains were first in the Fiji Islands, Madagascar, New Holland and New Zealand. From Salem also went the first American vessel that ever rounded the Cape of Good Hope and the first to bear the flag through the Straits of Magellan.

The last Salem ship in the pepper trade was the Australia, that visited Sumatra in 1861, and returned with the last cargo of pepper that was ever discharged at a Salem wharf. That year also saw the Close of the trade in Para rubber and May 1, 1870, when the bark Clide came in from Zanzibar, the last entry was made in maritime records of a Salem vessel from beyond the Cape of Good Hope.

In 1900 not a ship sailed from the "pepper port." and the old town, better known in the Far East than either Boston or New York, was dropped from the commerce of nations.

THE VALUE OF CREAM.

Although the value of cream as a builder of the body has long been recognized, it was looked upon as more of a luxury than a sovereign remedy, says The Dairy Record. Medical practice is taking it into account more than formerly, because doctors are coming to realize more and more that cream, a delicacy beloved of children, is a greater tissue builder than nauseous cod liver oil. Thousands who are living to-day have to bless the dairy cow for being their foster mother when they were helpless babes, and for again coming to their aid in their maturer years, and giving them her delicious cream, with which to keep up in the race with wasting disease. The writer, a correspondent of the Agricultural Gazette, has seen people waste with disease until they were mere shadows of their former selves, only to be brought back to health again when they returned to the farm for a while and drank plenty of cream. Of course other things will do it, but none surpasses cream. If people in the cities would use more cream for sick, delicate children they would get results cheaper than by using milk and cod liver oil.

Butterfat is not so awfully bad after all. Reindeer's milk is 17 per cent. butterfat and her baby grows bigger than any except the whale, but then the whale gives milk containing 40 per cent. fat. If butterfat causes infantile disturbances generally, why do children in the big cities suffer worse? Why does the southern part of the United States, as a whole, suffer more than other sections? Why is the infantile death rate higher from the Rhine to St. Petersburg in Russia, than in any other part of the world? Why are these diseases much more prevalent in summer than in winter? The reason is obvious. They are caused by bacteria. These bacteria multiply in the intestinal tract after ingestion. The proteids are broken down into forms which cannot be assimilated. Some of the products of proteid decomposition are deadly poisons. In this decomposition the bacteria have practically no action on fats and alkilies, but as the whole digestive system is paralyzed by the poisons being generated within it, absorption is impossible, and so fats are excreted with the alkilies in the form of soaps. It can be readily seen that if that awful condition continues long the subject will die from exhaustion, from lack of nourishment, and acute auto-intoxication, which means poisoning by toxins generated in the system.

THEORY AND PRACTICE.

The following paragraphs are taken from an article appearing in a recent issue of the Confectioners' Gazette:

In an age when commercial education is to the front it was inevitable that even store-keeping should be written about and theorized upon. After all, the man whose principal business is to deal out the necessities of life in small parcels to the multitudinous public will find, when he thinks about it, that salesmanship, for instance, is an art, and that its correct and profitable exercise is carried on when it is done in obedience to certain laws.

So the science of psychology is brought in in order to discover and expound the laws which govern the operation of buying and selling as between salesman and customer. The fact is simple enough; the former has goods he wishes to exchange as often and as profitably as he can for the money possessed by the latter. The customer has need of the goods which a bountiful earth provides, and must perforce avail himself of the retail distributing agent, through whom alone they can reach him. The mental processes which this mechanism of exchange involves are not quite so simple, and it is claimed that on the right understanding of them a successful career in salesmanship depends. Hence the output of literature on the subject. It is true our grandfathers got along very well without it. But they lived in less strenuous days, when competition was not so keen; and, possibly then, too, the human element, the familiar friendliness of a more leisurely time, entered into their transactions and supplied the place of a deeper study of the art of salesmanship. To-day we could not rest in their quiet methods, even if we would.

So, he who would hold his own nowadays must be abreast of the time. He must not be content with merely knowing all there is to know about the goods he handles; he must be familiar with markets and prices, with the way to buy on the best terms, and how to obtain the longest credits and the largest discounts. Further, he must know how to set out his goods in the most temptingly appealing way, and how to generate in the minds and imaginations of the largest number of possible customers an irresistible desire to possess his wares. In short, the whole secret of salesmanship consists in being able to please first, last, and all the time.

It will not be only that the goods offered to the public shall be of such sterling quality and genuine value as shall satisfy each and every customer; there is something more than that to be considered. It is true, as the legend lately seen on a small store window said, "We do not advertise to sell, we sell to advertise" (the proprietor evidently had ample faith in his wares); but the manner in which goods are sold has much to do with a pleased and satisfied regular clientele. No store can hope to be a success unless the service is a pleasant, ready, willing, and bright one. The proprietor and his assistants must positively go out of their way to make customers feel that the store is for them individually. There should be no trace of that cold, rude, official attitude which is sometimes observable in certain postoffices, where the clerk does just condescend, somewhat scornfully, it is true, to hand you a stamp or postal. This attitude will never do in a confectioner's store. Customers must not be kept waiting while conversations are finished at the end of the counter, or whilst the assistant completes wrapping the parcel he is engaged upon.

Given goods of the right kind and price, and tactful and pleasant handling of the purchaser, a business is put on its way to be a successful one. The former are the care of the proprietor or the buyer; the latter is the prime business of the assistants, to which also the proprietor must give some of his attention. But all cooperate to the final result, which is the good will of the business, an intangible asset, perhaps, but an indispensable one, having its seat in the breasts of many satisfied and pleased customers.

OPPORTUNITY OF GROCERY CLERKS.

How many people wonder at the young man, whose future lies before him and must be moulded, entering a grocery store as a clerk, remarks The Retailers' Journal. Some think he has no ambition, no foresight or no desire to become anything else, but as they say "a drudge in a grocery store, where he cannot possibly learn anything that will elevate him or be of service in a later day."

This is an erroneous opinion and instead of being discouraged for entering the grocery business as a clerk, every young man should be encouraged in such a venture. Opportunities present themselves in the grocery business for the young man that prepare him to take hold of the more weighty things that come up in business life, and upon which he will be able to pass judgment after serving as a clerk in a retail grocery establishment. It will lay the foundation for greater things for any young man.

As has been said, "The message written by men who can do things, men of experience, men who have toiled with the workers in the world of work—these are the men and the only men whose words have ever had an abiding value."

Big ideas are presented to the youth of the grocery store. He meets and deals with every class of people, learns their ways and their nature—he has a chance to study them, watch their follies and whims. He learns the value of credit, its uses and abuses, from both the wholesale and retail end. He learns the methods of his employer in carrying on business as well as that of competitive grocers and he forms his own ideas in the matter.

The grocery clerk must use judgment and tact in carrying out his daily work, and therefore strengthens his skill in adapting to circumstances, and last, but not least, he unconsciously learns the art of salesmanship. What more could a business acquaint one with than the grocery? Its great variety of work takes one through more angles of business than almost any other line.

Persons who do not think well of the ambition of a young man who enters the grocery store as a clerk or his future prospects, may change their minds after looking over the biographies of some of our famous men, where they will find many of them who started life as a clerk in a retail grocery store. Anyone who has read the life of Lincoln or Ingersoll will find that these men started life's path as grocery clerks, and they never appeared to be ashamed of it in after years.

The more variety a young man gets in a business the greater will be his business ability in later years—he will have an opportunity to develop his qualifications and talents. Of course there are those who are not and never will be fitted to enter business—they are not inclined toward this end, their talent running in another direction, but to the young man who likes the hustle and bustle of business and intends becoming a man of affairs no business will prepare him in this direction more thoroughly than that of the grocery store.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF CATTLE.

The number of cattle imported into the United States in the fiscal year 1912 was, with one exception, greater than in any preceding year, and the number exported less than in any year during the last quarter of a century. The number of cattle imported, as shown by a statement just prepared by the Division of Statistics was 318,372, valued at $8,870,075, and the number of domestic cattle exported was 105,506, valued at $4,805,574, while a decade ago the number imported was but 96,027, valued at $1,608,722, and the number exported 392,884 valued at $9,902,212. Thus the number of cattle imported in 1912 was three times as great as the number exported, while in 1902 the number exported was four times as great as the number imported.

The exportation of cattle from the United States has steadily declined in recent years, the number exported in 1904, the year of highest export record, having been 593,409; in 1907, 432,051; in 1909, 207,542; in 1912, 105,506. Meantime the importation of cattle has grown from 16,056 in 1904, to 32,402 in 1907, 139,184, in 1909, and 318,372 in 1912. The cattle imported are drawn almost exclusively from Mexico except in the case of those imported for breeding purposes, which come chiefly from England and Canada. Of the 316,243 head of cattle other than those for breeding purposes imported in 1912, 315,187 came from Mexico; and of the 2,129 imported for breeding purposes, 1,780 came from England and the remainder from Canada.

HOW TO MAKE PEANUT BUTTER.

Circular 98 of the Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture says:

"The growing popularity of peanut butter as a food has led to many inquiries regarding the methods employed in its manufacture. Peanut butter is in reality a very simple preparation, consisting merely of fresh roasted peanuts, ground finely and salted to suit the taste. Several large factories and a large number of smaller ones are now devoted to the manufacture of this product with which to supply the rapidly increasing demand. Some of the larger factories are almost models in their construction, equipment and management, while many of the smaller establishments, which have no elaborate equipment, are turning out an excellent product.

"Peanut butter was first manufactured and offered for sale as a food for invalids, but the article was soon adopted by many persons for one reason or another, such as preference for vegetable food by persons only who objected to the use of ordinary butter. It soon outgrew this condition of limited use, and its development on a commercial scale has been remarkable. It was never intended that this product should be used as a substitute or a competitor of butter, but as a luncheon delicacy and to add variety to the diet. Peanut butter is a wholesome and nutritious food product, and has become a popular article upon our markets. Last year one manufacturer used over 130 cars of shelled peanuts in the production of over 6,000,000 small jars of this food. Other manufacturers used large quantities, the total consumption of peanuts for the manufacture of peanut butter alone amounting during the year 1911 to approximately 1,000 cars of shelled goods, or 1,000,000 bushels.

"In order to produce high-class peanut butter the manufacturer must employ the best materials. On the other hand the use of the best stock obtainable will be of little avail unless the work of converting it into a salable product is conducted in a sanitary manner.

THE YEAR'S APPLE CROP.

An authority on the subject states that last year's apple crop will exceed 38,000,000 barrels. This is somewhat short of the record figures, but is substantially more than last year's crop.

In New York a splendid showing was made, well on to 7,000,000 barrels of apples, a big increase over last year. This gain, by the way, is almost entirely limited to the group of western counties, where apple orcharding has been brought down to a positive science. In the Hudson Valley the crop is really deficient. Michigan comes next in importance, with a gain over last year. Pennsylvania has a smaller crop than last year. New England as a whole will not differ from last year, Maine failing to realize in its entirety earlier hopes. The Central West and the Far West, the latter including the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific coast, have a good many more apples than a year ago. This is taken as a whole irrespective of quality. While the Pacific northwest and California have a splendid lot of apples, this is only partly true of the southwest.

THE SOURING OF MILK.

The souring of milk is not unlike the souring of fruit juice or vegetable matter, says Prof. G. L. Martin, of the North Dakota Agricultural College. It is due to the action of a particular kind of micro-organism which we call bacteria. These little organisms are a good deal like other forms of life, in that they must have air, moisture, warmth and food in order that they may live, multiply and work. The particular food of a great many bacteria is sugar, and the product which they manufacture is called acid. For instance, when the juice is pressed from the apple it is called sweet cider, because of the sugar it contains. But soon the bacteria enter from the air, from unclean utensils and from other surroundings, and at once begin the work upon the sugar, which soon turns the cider hard, and finally it becomes viengar unless put into an air tight keg and kept in a cool place.

Among the constituents of milk are water, to the amount of 87.1 per cent., fat, 3.9 per cent., acid, 3.5 per cent., mineral matter, .75 per cent. and sugar 4.75 per cent. When the milk is first drawn it tastes sweet because of the milk sugar which it contains, just the same as the cider tastes sweet when first pressed from the apples. The average milk, as will be seen, contains 5 per cent. sugar, which means about five pounds for every 100 pounds of milk, which when changed into acid by the bacteria, produces what we call souring.

To work best the bacteria require warm surroundings of about 70 degrees Fahrenheit, or room temperature; besides they must have some air and enough moisture to keep their food, the sugar, in solution. The milk, the same as cider has all these conditions present, so just as soon as it is drawn the bacteria begin to work rapidly, because since the milk is warm all the conditions necessary are exactly right. Then, unless the milk is cooler, they continue rapid work until all the sugar is turned to acid—the milk soured.

Since the little organisms must first get into the milk, then have a warm temperature in which to work, the way to prevent the milk from getting sour is to keep the bacteria out as much as possible, then make the surroundings so cold that they cannot work. To do this have all surroundings, as yard, stable and stall in good sanitary condition, then curry and brush the cow at least with as much care and attention as is given the horse. Keep all pails, strainers and other milk utensils scrupulously clean and finally cool the milk to 50 degrees Fahrenheit immediately after milking. Setting into an ice box, a cave or cellar to cool is not a very good plan, because of poor ventilation and bad odors.

THE POTATO.

The average run of dairy farmers, remarks Hoard's Dairyman, raise only enough potatoes for their own consumption. But even then the potato crop is a vastly important one. It is important that the average farmer know more than he does about the blights and other diseases of the potato that greatly diminish the quantity as well as the quality of the potatoes he finally consumes.

The Wisconsin College of Agriculture in its extension department is undertaking a widespread agitation of potato growing and the management of the various diseases that injure the crop. A meeting was held at Waupaca, Wis., recently in the midst of the great potato growing district, to organize a Wisconsin Potato Growers' association which was in all respects a decided success. Some of the most eminent students of the potato plant in the United States were brought to the meeting. Among them were Profs. J. G. Moore, J. G. Milward and L. R. Jones, of the State College. The latter gave an illustrated lecture on "Economic Potato Diseases." Prof. G. L. Fitch, of the Colorado station, spoke on the "Relation of Seed Selection" and G. H. Bell on "Improvement of Wisconsin Potato Soils." Mr. Bell has made a special study of soil improvement in the great potato growing districts of Maine. Besides there was an array of Wisconsin growers who have made a large success of potato growing.

THE DIFFERENCE IN FARMERS AND FARM MANAGEMENT.

The following article on the above subject is taken from Hoard's Dairyman of a recent issue:

"This is a very big subject, too big to be considered here. But big as it is it is a most vital one. Of course there is a great difference in men of other callings. There is wide range in the quality, capacity and success of merchants, lawyers, doctors, mechanics, and why not in farmers. But we are not concerned with these differences in other classes of men. The farmer and the farm are the especial studies of Hoard's Dairyman.

"The cow census investigations set agoing by this paper, disclosed such a widespread and amazing difference in the profits obtained from cows by farmers in the same neighborhood, and under closely similar conditions, that it has been a subject of perplexing study ever since. It is astonishing when you find two farmers living on almost adjoining farms, both patrons of the same creamery, both receiving exactly the same price for their butter, and one farmer receiving 600 per cent. more net profit from his cows than the other. Such differences are very disturbing to the thought of those who study them. It is very evident that something has been at work in all these years to create a great degree of sluggishness in the business intellect of a vast number of farmers who keep cows. It must be so, or these differences would not exist. What is it? Primarily we believe it is the country school. All farmers included are very largely the product of the school they were educated in. Agricultural science, or rather the science that pertains to agriculture, has turned the light of investigation upon the American farm and the way it is conducted.

"The light shows up these amazing differences. It has disclosed that the farmer of to-day has little or no knowledge of the scientific side of his business or of his farm. His country school kept him in ignorance of the language of science, of the terms in which such important knowledge is conveyed. Consequently he is more or less helpless before the important facts of his own business. Had he been taken when young and given this elementary knowledge he could have kept himself in the current by constant reading and thus knowing good from evil be prepared to have a discerning judgment concerning the more profitable conduct of his business.

"In all of these cow census investigations it is shown that the men who make the low percentages of profit, are men who read but little, study but little and know but little of the conclusions and practice of real intelligent dairying. That's what is the matter with them. They are like a man trying to run a complicated engine without having made a study of its parts.

"It has been the duty of Hoard's Dairyman to let in the light upon this blinded condition and show how uneconomical, how unprofitable, how wasteful were the ideas of this low percentage class of farmers. As yet they breed and handle seventy-five per cent. of the cows of the country. What these cows are in their low capacity, they have been so bred and made by the farmers who controlled their existence. Then their subsequent lack of proper care and feed is the product of the same lack of intelligent ideas of dairy farming. There can be no wonder that such ideas, such management, and such cows should produce results six hundred per cent. less in net profit than the cows bred and handled by men who are putting thought and study into the question.

"Here are two to three million of dairy farmers showing this wide disparity of profits. Accompanying the case is the same disparity of knowledge and intelligence. One is the measure of the other. With a vast proportion of the men in these United States, if it is true as the old Quaker said: 'They take their knowledge and their business mighty hard.' Until this class change their ideas and give more attention to the intelligent side of their business, the same wide difference in profits will continue to exist. 'There is where the shoe pinches.'"

WHY CLERKS REMAIN CLERKS.

The following article, appearing in a recent issue of the Retailers' Journal, was written by R. F. Haegelin, salesmanager of one of Chicago's large stores:

"He was a wise old saw who first gave vent to the homely truism: 'There is always room at the top.'

"Although we may have wished many times that the time-worn line had been lost or forgotten in its career through the centuries (for we don't always like to hear it), it is safe to say that no other eight words in the vocabulary have been as effective a spur to success as these have been.

"My work as salesmanager of a large jobbing house very naturally brings me in contact with all manner and sorts of men, and to sum the thing up tersely, before I go further, I will say, with full knowledge of my subject that ninety-nine of the failures that flock in to see me daily in quest of a "job" have failed of the fact that they were not actuated by any serious desire to succeed.

"Tell them so and they will enter a stout denial. As a matter of fact they will believe you are doing them a wrong by so judging them.

"And yet it is the truth, the hopeless, helpless truth.

"Some time ago I wrote an article in which I made the statement that the retail grocery clerk who wished to better his condition and make something of himself had but to open his eyes and look out upon an enviable career which he might enter with good qualifications and a very desirable training.

"I have in mind the profession of salesmanship and more particularly, the selling of wholesale groceries.

"Among the applicants who responded to my suggestions (I am alluding to retail grocery clerks) few were equipped with sufficient proof of getup, personal magnetism, argumentative force or common knowledge of the retail grocery business to convince me that they were even qualified to fill a responsible position behind the retail counter, not to speak of the road.

"Most of them lacked confidence in themselves. I could see it in their faces; I could scent it in the very air about them.

"And it came to me, very naturally, that if they could not convince me that their services were worth buying at so much per week, they would run a slim chance indeed of 'stacking up' against a live wire salesman for making a success of selling competitive products.

"It is a most assured fact that real brains in the selling force of the wholesale grocery field are, and have been for some years necessary qualification for a success.

"The grocery business is on a much higher plane than in former years. and the man with funny stories no longer cuts the figure, as of yore; but what good reason can be advanced for the grocery clerk not filling all the requirements of the game as it now exists?

"It is lack of aggressiveness, earnestness and willingness to stand the hard knocks in the path.

"There are too many of these disgruntled dispositions, who are better supplied with excuses than aught else, and who then readily explain to you that the grocery field no longer affords the same opportunities which obtained some years ago. The salaries are low, insufficient and, the business has no future in it. All of which is a joke.

"For I will take full responsibility for this statement, that no field to-day offers a better chance for advancement, and few indeed hold a more promising future to the right man than does this same business of selling groceries.

"The trouble is to-day that preparation for a profession is not considered essential by a majority of young men.

"They rely on a favorable appearance and a vague and hazy ambition to get an 'easy money' job, to accomplish for them what only hard work can do.

"What retail clerks should do, who wish to break into the ranks of grocery salesmen is, first of all, to settle down to their present work and bend their energies to mastering the details of the retail business. When this much has been well accomplished, they may feel reasonably confident of success as wholesale grocery salesmen, for their training behind the counter will give them an intimate knowledge of the business, such as none can gather who has not had the same opportunity.

"If, however, the clerk is now well posted in his work, there is no longer any necessity for his remaining in an apron, for there are many openings at all times for enthusiastic and well-qualified young men.

"But do not expect to receive ten dollars in money for two which you render in service. The principles of good business are not based on any such theory."

INTERNAL REVENUE COMMISSIONER SAYS OLEO FRAUDS CONTINUE.

The question of reducing the tax on colored oleomargarine to possibly 2 cents a pound, instead of 10 cents as now, is to come up again in the present session of congress, says a special correspondent of the Grocery World and General Merchant; in fact, it is already agitated, and a bill has already been introduced in congress, relieving oleo of part of its heavy burden of taxation. It is regarded here (Washington) as only a question of time when this will be done. The butter men are in Washington contending that oleo is a fraud and always will be, and that it will become a much worse one if the ten cent tax is removed. Their position is supported to some extent by a statement made by Internal Revenue Commissioner Cobell regarding the present fraudulent sale of oleo and its status under the existing tax law. Following are extracts from the Statement of the Commissioner:

"Attention has been called to the defects in the oleomargarine statutes as construed by the United States courts and to the deplorable situations occasioned thereby. Continued efforts to enforce this law served but to disclose the situation more clearly. The present law imposes two rates of taxation, one forty times as great as the other. on oleomargarine, the rate being determined by whether or not the product is artificially colored, which has proven a very poor method of determining the tax liability.

"The law provides that on oleomargarine there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents a pound, providing that when oleomargarine is free from artificial coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow, said tax shall be one fourth of one cent a pound. For a time after the passage of this law the oleomargarine manufactured was, on account of the nature of the ingredients used, white or a very light color, and the yellow color was obtained by using artificial coloring agents, such as are generally used in the manufacture of dairy butter. While large amounts of oleomargarine, as it reached its final purchasers, was artificially colored, the government succeeded in collecting tax at the higher rate on only a very small porportion thereof for the following reasons: Under the law the oleomargarine is permitted to be packed by the manufacturers and sold in large firkins or tubs containing about sixty pounds with a stamp on the outside showing proper tax payment. The retail dealer would buy a small number of tubs of artificially colored oleomargarine, tax paid, at 10 cents a pound. He would then proceed to buy large numbers of tubs tax paid at one fourth cent a pound. He would pay the special tax as a dealer in colored oleomargarine.

"The stamp on the tub does not have to be destroyed until the tub is empty, and the courts held that the tub is not empty as long as any merchantable oleomargarine remains therein. The retail dealer, therefore, would sell from his tubs of colored product and, in general, the product would be sold as butter, and when a certain number of tubs were nearly empty the dealer would remove them, together with a corresponding number of tubs tax paid at the lower rate, to some place in his private residence, or other place securely guarded, and there simply mix a little coloring matter with the white goods, refill the tubs in which had been colored oleomargarine, destroy the stamps on the tubs emptied of their white contents, take the refilled tubs back to his place of business and continue selling therefrom. Field officers discovered this done in numbers of cases, and in many other cases had reason to feel confident that the same processes were going on without being able to secure legal evidence thereof. Great difficulty has been experienced in securing convictions even where the facts of manipulation have been undisputed. In order to hold a person manipulating oleomargarine liable as a manufacturer, not only the manufacture, but the sale of the product must be shown, and legal evidence as to both manufacture and sale is often impossible to secure. By the simple process above enumerated, the retail dealer, with an equipment of the very simplest kind and with the minimum of labor and trifling expense and practical immunity from detection, because of the fact that the oleomargarine laws do not provide the summary right and remedies allowed government officers in enforcing other internal revenue laws, can add $9\frac{3}{4}$ cents to every pound thus manipulated and, by furnishing this to his customers when they call for butter, he is enabled to dispose of this product, which cost him from 12 to 15 cents a pound, at anywhere from 25 to 40 cents a pound. The comparative immunity from detection and punishment and the great financial profit growing out of the transaction have proven sufficient inducements to induce thousands of otherwise reputable grocers, market men and dealers to engage in the nefarious business of defrauding the government of its revenue and perpetrating a fraud on their customers. It is confidently believed that the oleomargarine law is at this time corrupting and debauching more taxpayers and affords the opportunity for greater fraud upon the public, than any other statute with which the internal revenue department has to deal.

"During the past two years, however, a considerable change has been brought about in the manufacture of certain grades of oleomargarine, which has introduced even more difficulty in the administration of the law, and that is the discovery of the method of extracting various vegetable oils, such as peanut oil, soy bean oil, mustard oil, etc., which carry naturally a high degree of yellow coloring, and which are sufficiently neutral and nutritive to be used as one of the actual ingredients in the manufacture of oleomargarine. Oleomargarine manufactured with one of these oils as a component ingredient carries a yellow color equal to that imparted by the addition of artificial coloring agents, yet no artificial coloring can be detected by any chemical reaction at this time known, with the result that a tax thereon of only one-fourth of one cent a pound can be collected. The present law, therefore, taxes in a manner intended to be prohibitive only on method of securing a certain result—that is securing yellow color by artificial means. It does not tax the result itself, and a new method for securing such result, not within the purview of the statute, having been discovered, the law is rendered practically nugatory. There is some question as to whether oleomargarine manufactured with yellow oils referred to is quite so palatable or saleable as that manufactured white and then colored. The sale of the product manufactured from the yellow oils, however, while still small appears to be steadily increasing, and with its increase the artificial coloration by dealers may be expected to decrease in proportion.

"At present the color of the product is, therefore, practically no indication as to whether or not artificial coloration has been resorted to. Only in few jurisdictions does it appear possible to secure conviction under the present law. In fact, anything like a satisfactory administration of the present law is clearly impossible.

"It is strongly urged that there should be a complete revision of the oleomargarine statutes, that the double rate of taxation should be abolished and that a flat rate be adopted in lieu thereof, that the practice of handling oleomargarine in bulk or in large packages be prohibited; that the manufacturers be required to pack oleomargarine in approved statutory packages running from one-half to five pounds, and that each and every package shall be sealed with a revenue stamp affixed; that the product shall be sold only in original unbroken packages and that heavy penalties be denounced for removal from factory in other than stamped packages and for any dealer having in his possession or selling any oleomargarine not covered by proper stamps and that heavy penalties be denounced for selling oleomargarine as butter. The package and stamp laws providing for the manufacture and sale of tobacco are believed to be the best yet devised. It appears that these statutes can be made applicable almost in toto to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine."

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

A well known authority recommends the use of buttermilk as a remedy for infant diarrheas because it has a low fat content and a relatively high calcium content. It should replace one or two meals of previous food mixed with flour and sugar. In a few cases this authority did not secure good results with this treatment, but he says failures under buttermilk treatment are very rare, and that this simple method is likely to prove successful in a majority of cases.

A trade journal remarks: Did you ever visit a certified milk plant, where almost every precaution possible is taken to produce the best and purest grade of milk that can be produced? Well, if you haven't, don't fail to do so whenever you have a chance. It may open some milkmen's eyes as to knowledge of what real cleanliness is. 'Twould be a good thing, too, for in going over the country we find plenty of places where the eyes of the manager need to be opened to a few things.

Trustworthy figures for the five years from 1906 to 1912 show that the consumption of ice cream in the United States advanced from 55,000,000 gallons to 120,000,000 gallons. Last year about 120,000,000 gallons of this delicacy was eaten by Americans—an average of five quarts per capita. The ordinary method of freezing ice cream by salt and ice is a striking example of economic waste. Every 100 gallons of ice cream requires a ton and a half of ice and 800 pounds of salt. And the salt is not recovered and the ice melts rapidly away. Electricity is now conserving these materials by producing artificial refrigeration and applying it to the manufacture of ice cream. Electric motor drive is used to turn the freezers.

Uncle Sam's egg reporting experts have been taking an egg census. They have announced that although there were only 1,119,096,000 eggs in cold storage at this time last year there are now in the warehouse awaiting consumption some time in the winter, when prices get high enough to induce the "egg kings" to dispose of them, exactly 1,137,133,800 eggs.

Somebody has figured this out: An acre of tillage land eight inches thick weighs 2,000,000 pounds (1,000 tons). In the east the average dressing of concentrated fertilizer is 1,000 pounds per acre where no manure or other fertilizer is ploughed under. To the western farmer who uses from 400 to 800 pounds per acre, 1,000 pounds seems large but it gives only one pound of mixed fertilizer to every ton of soil. This infinitesimal amount, combined with the natural yield of the land has been known to produce under favorable weather conditions 400 bushels of potatoes, 100 bushels of shelled corn or 30 to 40 tons of ensilage per acre, to produce profit in place of loss; to turn failure into success and still leave the soil no poorer, but in most cases much better.

Says a journal devoted to the betterment of the dairy industry: The covered milk pail is without doubt one of the greatest helps available in obtaining a supply of so-called clean milk. In getting at the source of production thus, the need for pasteurization or any other doctoring process is largely eliminated. Further evidence of the value of this pail is that many eminent authorities recommend its use. With such a simple and practical means of bettering the milk supply at hand why would it not be an excellent idea for every milk dealer to require his shipper to use these pails, even if it were necessary for the dealer himself to furnish them?

A New Hampshire grocer has a monthly settlement day for his customers, when all outstanding bills are supposed to be paid. This day always comes on a Saturday, and the Friday daily paper carries the announcement of the fact that "To-morrow is Monthly Settlement Day." His customers have, by this method, become trained to settling their bills on this particular day.

Ninety barrels of vinegar in the possession of the Holbrook Marshall Grocery Company, of Nashua, N. H., were seized by pure food inspectors because of misbranding.

When the first Hawaiian pineapples in tins were placed in the eastern markets of the United States ten or a dozen years ago, small quantities were bought reluctantly, often as a favor to the sellers, scarcely any of the first buyers believing the goods would prove popular with the public. The retailers hesitated at first to show the goods to their customers. The sale of the product has now nearly reached 1,000,000 cases yearly.

It is constantly heard in public addresses and seen in print that it is impossible for the ordinary farmer to produce beef profitably, while just as constantly the farmers in the corn belt are throwing away the corn plant, which if preserved in the silo, is the finest meat making food in the world. Hoard's Dairyman remarks that it will be a great triumph of American civilization when the farmer is induced to stop this great waste and turn it into meat or milk.

The largest quantity of mackerel ever brought into Boston at one time was landed recently, says the Butchers' Advocate. Fourteen vessels arrived with 352,400 fresh mackerel and 1,068 barrels of salt fish. One schooner brought a mackerel 25 inches long and weighing seven and a half pounds. This was the largest fish of the kind ever seen by wharf dealers. Prices of large fish dropped from 35 cents each to 23 cents at wholesale when news of the big catch became public.

It was recently reported in the daily newspapers that a notice had been issued to the collectors of customs by the Treasury Department, saying that the Department of Agriculture had held that refined tartaric acid and cream of tartar containing lead in excess of that permitted by law should be held as adulterated.

The Treasury Department in its crusade for sanitary conditions has forbidden the brewing of tea in the department building in Washington. Many of the women clerks in the noon hour used to brew their own tea and have a little something warm with their basket luncheon. The new order, according to reports, caused a commotion among the tea drinkers and under pressure from them the Treasury officials have finally consented to set aside a room in which all of the tea drinkers may retire at the noon hour, each one to brew her little pot.

The retail grocers of a number of towns in various sections of the country are advocating a co-operative delivery plan, which is claimed to greatly reduce the cost of delivering orders. It is claimed that in one place one man and horse under the co-operative system can do the work and do it better than seven men and an equal number of horses did under the old system where every merchant has his own delivery service.

A ship recently put into the port of New Orleans carrying the greatest cargo of coffee on record. The cargo consisted of 126,000 sacks and was valued at $100,000 less than $3,000,000.

Under the title "The Elimination of Caffein; An Experimental Study on Herbivora and Carnivora," the Bureau of Chemistry, United States Department of Agriculture, has issued an interesting pamphlet, which is confined to a statement of results of experiments on various animals, such as rabbits, guinea pigs, cats and dogs. There is nothing in the extensive study which has any immediate application to the question of the use of coffee by human beings.

The sale of dried fruits not marked in compliance with the provisions of the Pure Food act continues to bring grocers to grief, no doubt in many an instance due to suspended vigilance.

United States Consul Rea Hanna, located at Georgetown, British Guinea, in a report says: The market for confectionery in the local markets is practically in the hands of British manufacturers. Recently American candies in hermetically sealed bottles have made good progress, but fine American chocolates and fancy candies are unknown. This is due to the fact that American confectioners have not yet prepared candies for this climate. The average temperature here is about 80 to 85 degrees Fahrenheit, and the humidity for the greater part of the year is excessive. Candy to be shipped here must be a little harder than for home consumption, must have each piece wrapped in tin foil, and must be shipped in air tight tins or the best moisture proof boxes possible. The market is well worth cultivating as in this colony alone there are four importers who each order for the annual Christmas trade 800 to 1,000 pounds of chocolates and fancy candies. In the past attempts have been made to purchase American chocolates in tin foil, but the additional price asked for them by manufacturers made the proposition impossible.

Twice as much ice cream was consumed by the American people last year than in 1906, it being estimated that the consumption is five quarts per capita per year.

A loaf of bread, 4,500 years old, it is estimated, was recently discovered in a tomb in Egypt. It was made of barley and the grain was only rudely crushed and not sifted. It was dark brown in color, with a large number of holes in the inside of the loaf or cake. It is now in the Royal Museum at Berlin.

The sale of polished rice will not be permitted in Michigan after January 1, next, the State Dairy and Food Commissioner claiming that its sale is a violation of the state pure food law.

Officers some time ago raided two grocery stores in Essex, Conn., and seized nearly 2,000 bottles of beer and also a barrel of wine.

Farmers supplying milk to New York city are receiving the highest price ever paid by dealers for milk in that city since the civil war.

After December 1, The Milk Exchange will pay $1.80 per forty quart can, an advance of ten cents per can. The increase in population and a shortage in cows were given as the cause of the advance. The retail price remains at nine cents a quart.

In an article appearing in the Philadelphia North American recently headed "Rice—a Cheap and Valuable Food," the writer concludes as follows: "The consumer has in rice a food of the highest value—a food especially suitable for invalids and children, and one easy of digestion. Boiled rice can be digested in an hour, while milk takes twice as long. Its nutritive value is 87 per cent. as compared with 82.54 per cent. in wheat and 23.24 per cent. in potatoes. Rice contains fewer alkaline salts than any other food, even from nine to seventeen times less than milk, hence it does not tax the overworked kidneys. Bunge states that rice is the most easily utilized of all foods, taxing the body least in both digestion and elimination. It is the best food for sore and feeble stomachs. It should be the chief food for all persons suffering from Bright's disease. Combe also prescribes it for all persons suffering with intestinal autointoxication. With this cheap and valuable food within the reach of every one in this country, why do not housewives make a more general use of it? Economically and dietetically, rice should stand next to milk as the most important food that consumers can use."

In view of the conflicting opinions among the laity as to the effects of drinking tea and coffee, it is interesting to note among the opinions of the medical profession, obtained by the Medical times, of New York, who arranged a symposium that the majority are to the effect that coffee and tea are harmless.

Supreme among dairy cows, Creamelle Vale, developed and owned by the Fred F. Field Holstein Company, Dutchland Farms, Brocton, Mass., is the world's milk champion of all breeds, having surpassed all previous yearly records by her remarkable production of 29,653.4 pounds of milk. This record is further strengthened by one of the largest butter production of the breed—a result which has been achieved through the blood strains of producing families.

The coffee crop of Mexico varies from 77,000,000 to 110,000,000 pounds, of which about 40,000,000 pounds are exported. The yield of coffee this year according to Consul Clarence M. Miller, located at Tampicó, will be greater than last year.

The coffee yielding area of Brazil has shrunk since the last big crop and what few new trees have been planted cannot make up for the wastage of those going annually out of production. The new plantation at Parana, on which such stress is laid cannot influence the volume of the present season's crop.

As a remedy for world-famous increase in the cost of living, a Belgian chemist, M. Elfront, suggests the consumption of artificial foods. He asserts that he has synthetically produced viands closely resembling butcher's meat in taste, but of greater nutritive value. His method is to take such industrial residue as malt grains and to extract therefrom the albumen. The malt grains after being washed, pressed and treated with sulphuric acid and then lime, give after filtration and evaporation a pasty substance, tasting like meat, but with three times as much nourishment. Several doctors at Brussels have experimented on men with this artificial meat with satisfactory results. The chemist has also prepared another food from the hay of Lucerne and clover and other fodder, the nutritive quality of which has passed the tests.

During the past year the price of meat continued to soar and the cost of living to meat eaters went up with it. Vegetarians, however, were gainers, for virtually all vegetables fell in price, with the exception of beans.
